About the Paicines AVA:

The Paicines appellation is approximately 27 miles inland of the Monterey Bay, in a wind tunnel of cool ocean air flowing to the San Joaquin Valley. Because of the relative lack of trees adjacent to the vineyard areas, the Paicines area is open to the direct influence of these winds. In the afternoon, Paicines takes advantage of the slight cooling breeze that comes in off the Monterey Bay. At night Paicines is more protected from the evening fog than much of the surrounding area because of its open location. However, during periods of extremely heavy fog, the Paicines area holds the fog longer than much of the nearby area. Elevation ranges from 500 to 1,200 feet above sea level. The various soils in this area are primarily comprised of loam with deposits of decomposed granite and limestone, and are generally well drained, of various depths, and root zones are quite deep.
