So let me get this straight so all you old folks who live up close by the dunes are complaining about air quality and saying off-roading in the dunes is bad for the air hahahah maybe if you old folks would get out and do something and have fun instead of finding something to complain about and especially off-roading in the dunes with families traveling for miles to come enjoy good times with friends and family and not only that from all the people coming out brings a lot of money to the city and keeps money flowing around there, it doesn't bring smog or air pollution I have a friend who really knows all about clean air and works for the city of LA and he even said there's no such thing as air pollution from sand that it's just like having a windy day with dust being blown and that doesn't exist and if you people want to learn about air pollution come take a visit down here to Southern California in LA and the inland empire then you'll see what air pollution really is. A lot of those dust storms aren't caused by people off-roading go out and sit for an hour and find out for yourselves that slot of it is caused by dust storms. A lot of us do understand that you cant have that much fun as you did when you all were younger but open your eyes and be faithful and be happy to see families out having fun.
