HOSPITALITY

All of our furniture is made locally in our workshop in Nairobi, Kenya. Not only is this good for the local economy, but it also allows us to carefully control the production process in order to offer the best quality to our customers. Our Kenyan craftsmen are highly skilled with years of experience. This may not be the cheapest or easiest way to make furniture, but we believe it's worth it.

MAMBO ITALIA

We designed and built a series of custom pieces to furnish the Mambo Italia restaurant in Garden City Mall. The pieces were made from old reclaimed dugout canoes, originally hewn from single tree trunks. We're especially proud of the hanging chandeliers also made from the dugout canoes.

MAHOGANY

East African Mahogany is generally a reddish-brown color, with some pieces more red and others more neutral, depending on the growing conditions of the tree. It tends to have a straight, regular grain which can yield beautiful dark and light bands of color when finished. It takes stain very nicely, which can neutralize the redness and yield a refined color similar to walnut.

MVULI

Mvuli is one of the most popular timber species in East Africa, alongside mahogany. It is also commonly known as iroko or African teak and is found across tropical central Africa. Similar to teak in both appearance and physical properties, it is quite hard and durable and is resistant to rot and termites, making it suitable for use indoors and out.

MANGO

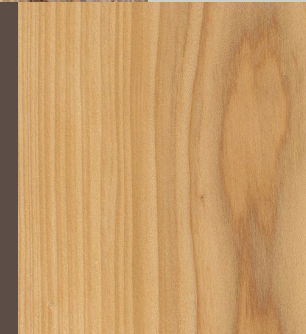

Mango is one of the most sustainable woods available in Kenya: when mango trees grow old, the quality of the fruit declines and they are typically cut and replaced with new trees. This creates a perfect source of wood for furniture, which we source from the coast of Kenya.

Mango is softer than mahogany or mvuli, but harder than softwoods like cypress, making for durable, longlasting furniture.

CYPRESS

Compared to hardwoods such as mahogany and mvuli, cypress is often considered a second class timber due to its characteristic knots and relative softness. However, its light grain and knots are quite beautiful when finished, so we think it is worthy of consideration for certain pieces and more casual spaces.
