Whispering corridors

Whispering corridors is a phenomenon in which sounds travel through a series of resonant spaces to create a aural effect. These corridors are typically found in buildings with tall, narrow spaces, such as those found in Greek temples and ancient Rome. In these spaces, sound waves travel through the corridors and are reflected off the walls, creating a echo effect. Whispering corridors are a fascinating example of the way in which human-made structures can interact with sound to create unique acoustical experiences.
