Text of submission	I have been told because I went back to Uni for one term to study science, to better myself, knowledge, I now have to wait another three years before I am offered permanency??? I have four children, one only two y/o when I decided FT working was proving difficult, as well as being a FT mother etc. Therefore, I took myself back to Uni, PT to study science - thinking this would put me in a better position, broaden my chances at gaining teaching work (as I didn't major in anything) and especially as grade 7's are due to move up to high school in a few years time. It's not a nice feeling having to wait till the very last day of each year or even day 8, to see if I have a job the following year. Due to the state of the economy at present, my husband's work has unfortunately dried up. We are very dependent on my wage at present. This will stop during the holidays. I do feel I am in a no-win situation?! And am considering changing my career, knowing I have a better chance getting a FT permanent position in another field. This does upset me because I love my job, I loved teaching!!!!
