Connection Regulator for the Elements of Connection Elemental Filaments

Harmonizing Network Anatomy

The connection regulator is located in the soul layer where two swirling individuated primary currents meet and form the elements of connection. The regulator is part of the Harmonizing Network and contained in the anatomy of the elements of connection.

Primary currents are the individuated golden yellow, red, and blue streams. They are not only glowing primary colors but also the primary energies initiating individuation.

Elements of connection only occur in the soul layer and there are always two different individuated currents that make up elements of connection. These are always original Source based currents not the secondary currents created by the encounter of two primary energies.

The connection regulator is located within the elements of connection and helps them function. It appears as a sparkling light but within the light are hundreds of tiny filaments or sparks of light gathered together in a ball with tips of the filaments sticking out at the edges. These are called elemental filaments and they are attracted to each other through compatible resonance.

These elemental filaments influence the regulation of the elements of connection but are monitored and directed by a connection regulator contained within the interior of the ball of elemental filaments floating within the larger interactive field of the two energies. Each single elemental filament emerges out of the individuated current and is drawn to other elemental filaments to band together and form miniscule balls of glowing light called elements of connection. Their function is to regulate the frequency and pace of change as two intersecting primary currents create a new current of a different color.

All of these parts make up the elements of connection which is a small system devoted to the correct management of the blending of energies within the soul layer. Even though it is part of the Harmonizing Network the Blended Energies System is a cousin and the harmonizing frequency of it must be used to restabilize the anatomy after a session.

The pathologies that are possible in elements of connection are directly related to the functionality of the elemental filaments as they band together to influence the development of the individuated primary energies. as they meld together to make secondary energies, lights and colors and the connection regulator that monitors the flow of energy that allows this powerful tiny anatomy to influence the evolution and the fuel of the sacred anatomy.

Debris in the elemental filaments and the elements of connection as a whole, causing clumping together can create issues as can a breakdown of the connection regulator.
