Soul Path Congestion Residue Removal

What?

Chakra plaque is the debris that results from the constant use of the chakras as passage-ways for the function, purpose and wisdom currents. Soul path congestion residue is the collection over time of a residue that is related to already released, resolved and cleared soul path congestions. This residue is a remnant of the constantly changing personality reflected in a Soul Path Congestion that has already been released and yet still, affects energy moving through the chakras. It can complicate chakra plaque by adding on to it and covering it over to form a thicker barrier inside the chakra.

Why?

The chakra demands that all uninformed energies be stripped of previous data as they travel through the system. In an effort to fulfill this demand and self-correct, any residue originating from the release of a soul path congestion that remains in a chakra, pathway, valve, or stream is ultimately deposited along the sides of the currents. At the same time the energies are moving so rapidly even small amounts of debris in the currents can hinder optimum function.

These energies collect at the greater gate* at the entrance to the core and cause the energies of intentionality to pool and eddy as they are reaching the correct speed to move through the core. If a recently released soul path congestion is still stimulating the process of transformation residue and build up at the greater gate will be constantly created. The slowing of the speed of the intentionality node caused by the residue can be interpreted as a holding on to the old way of being, especially if the psychological aspect is responding hesitantly. Suggesting psychotherapy and a continuing look at the behaviors ingrained by the SPC is a good idea. The residue from a soul path congestion is thick and sticky. The pulse will still be dragging and the chakra will be less effective.

How?

If the plaque stays in place over time it will build up a hard and coarse internal blockage like silt in a creek bed. It can cause the affected current to move more slowly and the chakra to be less effective. The residue of the soul path congestion attracts new debris out of the resistance to release and the holding of the formed and functioning personality, which is struggling with the destabilization of the soul path congestion release. It will seek to recreate the same issue. Removing residue will release the chakra to full functionality and remove the ability it has to reignite the same old personality trait.

Release of Soul Path Congestion Residue

1. Apply the Edge Practice: and with permission determine need for release.
2. Locate: dowse: how many? Which chakras? Are ready for release?
3. Discuss: how releasing the personality forming soul path congestion and the emotional and psychological issues that accompany it may produce a special residue. Determine in discussion if the client still needs this residue to bridge the release and the egoic shift. The client will need to be ready to fully let it go. At 100% readiness move to release. If you do not reach 100% readiness, do not proceed. It means the client needs this residue to grow and it will come up for removal again.
4. Insert light fingers: directly into the corridor of the affected chakra. The residue will not be in the corridors but located primarily around the sides of the intentionality but can also be in receptivity. It feels tar like, heavy and lumpy and ranges from the texture of hard coal to a gelatinous feeling sticky mass. Remove fingers.
5. Bring: in Surrender and direct it through the incoming soul pathway, through the chakra to the residue on all sides of the chakra, and out the chakra stream back into the soul layer. It is not necessary to know exactly where it is located to release it. Bring it in until residue begins to break away from the walls. It will move, now, in an unformed state, into the chakra stream and be absorbed easily.
6. Bring in: ULL following the Surrender to soothe the chakra and move to recovery.
7. Bring in: Harmonizing the BES
8. Integration, Blending, Witness, Stabilization, Integration, and Blending
