Social media – the best way to receive information

[1] (1) As technology has become more advanced, we can easily gain access to infinite data through the click of a button. (2) In the old days, people used to buy a newspaper or a magazine from a stall. In modern times, we can search for almost everything on the Internet with our mobile devices. When it comes to receiving information about recent trends, I would definitely prefer using the social media. I am going to take one area of pop culture as an example: technology and games.

[2] Most significantly, there are various forms of presentation when delivering information through social media. (1) They not only include words and pictures, but also music and videos. (2) For instance, if a customer hopes to figure out how a GoPro camera works, thousands of videos can be found on YouTube. Some are about the control systems of the camera, while others are showing special functions. (3) Through these detailed demonstrations, the audience can gain a better understanding of a technological product before purchasing it. (4) In contrast, traditional print media have a limited form of presentation. (5) As newspapers are comprised of monochrome words and pictures, there is only a list of basic information – price, functions and users' comments. (6) It is difficult to convey information, let alone convince customers to buy a product. Hence, social media are preferable when people try to keep up with new trends.

[3] A further reason is that social media are useful for building communities.

(1) When people with the same interest are connected, more efficiently. (2) Social networking sites like Facebook and MeWe allow gamers to establish interest groups. The audience can comment, exchange their gameplay experience and create new events. (3) Social media provide people with a platform to discuss new trends and share related content. (4) On the contrary, it is almost impossible to gather people by using traditional media. (5) Most print magazines and newspapers have removed opinion columns because of the limited space. (6) Print media are unfavorable for interactions among readers, thus hindering the acquisition of information. To keep abreast of the latest trend, most people resort to social media instead.

[4] Lastly, with the help of social media, we enjoy unlimited access to different sources. (1) Since they are mostly free of charge, we can easily obtain countless information of the pop culture. (2) To exemplify, there are tens of hundreds of free YouTube videos about game trailers. They are not only frequently updated, but also easily accessible. (3) Internet users can keep up with the ever-changing trend of pop culture anytime and anywhere. (4) Nevertheless, newspaper or magazine readers have to be charged daily or weekly. (5) Owing to restricted number of pages, information is less detailed, not to mention delayed. (6) If readers would like to receive more information, they would still have to go online. As a result, social media would be more favourable when people are informed about the latest trend in the gaming or technological industry.

[5] All in all, social media certainly have the advantage over traditional print media, especially for those who are interested in pop culture. They have various forms of presentation, help to build communities and provide us with unlimited access to different sources. Yet, traditional media had once dominated our society for many years before the digital age. They have their own values, and they should not become obsolete easily. For the sake of future developments, it is undoubtedly a good idea to integrate the two types of media.

To explain why I consider social media a better alternative when obtaining information about trending topics, I am going to take one area of pop culture as an example: technology and games.

[2] Most significantly, when information is delivered via social media, there are various forms of presentation, (1) including not only words and pictures but also GIFs, music and videos. (2) To exemplify, videos that introduce a GoPro camera on YouTube allows customers to look deeply into its operation and control systems. Another case in point is that gamers would find it easier to showcase a new game's graphics, mechanics, and even how smoothly the characters can move. (3) These detailed and thorough demonstrations are essential for a better understanding of any technological and gaming products they are searching for. (4) Contrarily, traditional print media have a limited form of presentation. (5) Most newspapers are comprised solely of monochrome words and pictures. The only thing available is a list of basic information of a product – price, functions and users' comments, (6) which are rather tedious and unconvincing. Hence, social media are preferable when people, especially teenagers, keep up with new trends.

[3] A further reason is that social media play an indispensable role in building communities, (1) thus fostering interactions among people with the same interests. (2) Platforms like Twitch enable gamers to broadcast their gameplay, while the audience may comment, exchange their experience and create new events. Numerous social networking sites also enhance the establishment of interest groups for discussing hot topics and sharing relevant content: Facebook, MeWe, to name but a few. (3) People are connected regardless of where they are, which facilitates further access to more information. (4) On the contrary, it is almost impossible to gather people through traditional media. (5) The restriction on space has forced most print magazines and newspapers to remove the opinion columns. Some do contain sections for readers to comment, but rarely are they used for exchanging ideas interactively, (6) making it less user-friendly for communication, not to mention the acquisition of information. To keep abreast of the latest trend, most people resort to social media instead.

Closing Sentence

[4] A final and equally important point is that we enjoy unlimited access to countless sources through the utilization of social media. (1) That they are mostly free of charge allows us to obtain an infinite number of search results simply by typing a keyword. (2) To give an illustration, there are tens of thousands of free YouTube videos about game trailers that can be frequently updated, easily accessible and directly shared. (3) Internet users can keep up with the ever-changing trend of pop culture every moment. (4) Nevertheless, readers of print media, like newspaper or magazine, have to be charged daily or weekly with limited content. (5) Owing to the constraints on the number of pages and length of description, information is less comprehensive, and more importantly, delayed. (6) Readers who are seeking further details would still have to go online. As a result, social media would be more favourable when it comes to the delivery of information.

[5] All in all, social media certainly have the advantage over traditional print media with a view to their forms of presentation, community building services and accessibility. Yet, never should we neglect that traditional media had once dominated our society for centuries before the digital age. It is believed that they have their own values and hence should not become obsolete. For the sake of future developments, integrating the two types of media would be worthy of consideration.

Part B Question 5

Sharing is Caring = Pop Culture Edition

Whether we know it or not, we have probably taken part in contributing to pop culture. Not only is it something unavoidable in the entertainment industry, it may also very well be embedded into our cultures.

5 But how does this information spread, you ask? Most notably, information on popular culture can be spread through 2 major channels = through print media, or through electronic media like social media.

Personally, I get most of my information through the Internet.

Specifically, I hear about popular trends ~~and things~~ through social 10 media. Although we may all agree that the Internet may not be the most factual place in the world, social media does a remarkably good job of spreading information about pop culture. There are as many niche areas of pop culture as there are stars in the sky, so today I will focus on two of the larger areas of pop culture = TV and movies, and Music
15 and concerts.

As a young person with access to the Internet, I am unsurprisingly a fan of all sorts of TV shows and movies. With the emergence of social media like Twitter, Facebook, Instagram, and Youtube, many influencers have gained huge amounts of followers, and subsequently,
20 Internet fame. Fans of TV shows such as The Good Place, or popular movies like products from Disney or Marvel, all gather across the many social media to share and discuss the things they love to watch.

Level 5 exemplar 1

Part B Question 5

Similarly, fans of music and concert-goers also congregate across the web to discuss the music and artists they love, albeit with 25 the addition of sound and audio-based social platforms like Soundcloud, Spotify, and Stracks. These platforms in particular allow fans of music and concerts to stream, share, or create music of their own for the world to see.

A major reason for why social media carries information about 30 pop culture so quickly and why it allowed pop culture to spread so extensively <sup>to us consumers</sup> is because of the interactivity available for the fans of pop culture. Actors from TV shows and movies often have accounts on most major social media platforms <sup>(to promote their work.)</sup>. Actors like Tom Holland, who recently gained fame for portraying Spiderman,
 35 will even facilitate the spread of pop culture information by posting about the next movie he will star in, when his followers asked for a trailer. Similarly, musicians offer the same sort of interactivity and communication with fans by releasing concert tour dates, replying to messages, and promoting their works. Promotional events, such as
 40 actors and artists taking over a site's Twitter for a day to answer questions, or appearing in various youtube videos, also provide consumers like us with a lot of direct information about pop culture.

Another reason why I prefer obtaining information about pop culture from social media is due to the fan communities that 45 exist there. Blog posts on Tumblr about a fan's reaction to seeing

Level 5 exemplar 1

Part B Question 5

a show or concert, or even a Youtube video of fans reacting to a movie trailer for the first time is a good way to learn about the general public's views on a piece of media. Due to the fast-paced spread of information on social media that was mentioned 50 previously, we are able to obtain information much more readily than compared to print sources.

The trend of sharing reactions, interacting with artists, and communication between fans is something unique to pop culture on social media. As fragile as parts of the Internet may be, there are 55 still places that spread reliable information, especially on pop culture!
