Materially is a Milan-based boutique advisory that has focused for over twenty years on innovative and sustainable materials. We are currently a team of mostly women. Our various backgrounds – design, CMF, materials engineering and manufacturing processes, academics, communication – provide our team a transdisciplinary culture to support companies to innovate their product strategy using materials.

at the center of a material ecosystem

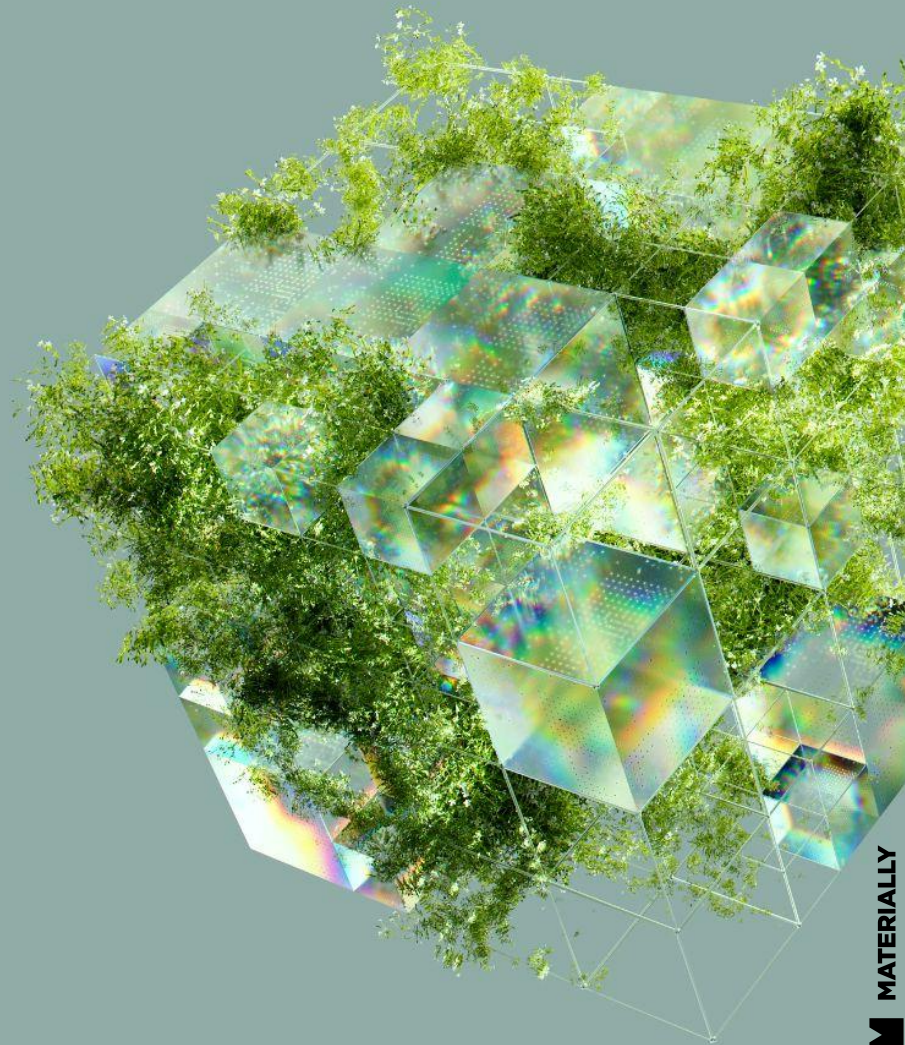

Materiality sits at the heart of a dynamic ecosystem, connecting a wide range of stakeholders involved in material and technological solutions.

This includes not only material producers but also start-ups, research centers, and both direct and indirect users such as manufacturing industries, designers, architects, academic institutions, and associations.

Additionally, we collaborate with a diverse group of external partners on various initiatives, including circularity and eco-design, testing, regulations and certifications, as well as events and communication.

our mission: circularity and responsible innovation

Our mission in working with companies is to help them find their way to circularity via material innovation, and to understand the alternative possible approaches to the complex theme of responsible production and consumption.
