It will start the programs you use on a daily basis faster than normal applications. It also monitors and adjusts your system for the best performance. Application Accelerator options: After installation, you will see a new menu in the tray, with the following options: Memory: You can use this option to adjust the amount of RAM memory you have available to your programs. The default is 64 MB. I suggest you set this to 512 MB. Rendering Mode: This function will be explained when you learn about the desktop effects. CPU: You can use this option to set the priority of your current program. The default priority is Normal. By lowering it to High, you will see your CPU usage decrease in exchange for an increase in the RAM memory usage of your currently running programs. Power Management: This option will be explained in the desktop effects chapter. Shutdown: This will reboot your lap top if you click it. If you want to prevent your system from starting again, then click the box at the top. It will ask you if you want to enable Application Accelerator the next time you start up your lap top. Application Accelerator problems: I have not had any problems with this program, but I have only been using it for 3 days. If you do have problems, you can always use the program Troubleshooter, which is covered in an upcoming chapter, to fix these problems. The default is that Application Accelerator stays on all the time. In your tray menu, you will see a red lightning bolt that is there to remind you that it is on. If you don't want it to be on all the time, go to the tray menu and right mouse click on the icon, and you will see a "Use on boot" option. Make sure that this is turned off when you don't want it to start on your lap top.Ancient Egypt The 28th Dynasty was a period in the history of Egypt between the time of the last pharaoh of the 26th Dynasty, Hatshepsut, and the rule of her grandson, Psamtik I. The last rulers of this dynasty were probably Isi, founder of the 23rd Dynasty, and his wife, Tuya. This period was also sometimes referred to as the Great Hordsmosis Period. The titles of the kings of this period are damaged and only a few of them can be read. The same situation occurs with the contents of the inscriptions found at this time

Application Accelerator detects when a new program starts up, or when an existing application starts up and tells your computer what to do. Whenever an application starts up, Application Accelerator automatically decides what the next task should be so that your computer resources are used efficiently. As an example of Application Accelerator in action, let's use the calculator and word processor. When you open a word processor and a new document is created, Application Accelerator will tell the computer that the next task should be to open the new document. When you open the calculator and you get an answer, Application Accelerator sends the computer the task of opening the new document. That's how every time you open a program, every program will be optimized for you so that you get the best performance.
