Getting back your bond money is the most important thing that is always wavering in your mind at the end of the lease. The thoughts keep on coming up and down whether you will be able to get your bond money back or not? Will the property owner deduct your amount or pay you full back? Will he not unnecessary raise issues with the intention of blocking your money?

Don't worry, Bond Cleaning Gold Coast will help you and explain to you how you can claim your bond amount back?

Firstly, you need to fill a form and submit a request to Residential Tenancies Authority (RTA) (with whom the bond amount is deposited at the time of occupancy) for claiming your bond. This can also be done online by logging on to the website of RTA.

If the landlord agrees on the refund of the bond and all the parties have signed the form, the amount gets credited into the bank account within 2-3 days. But, if the landlord is not in agreement with the refund claim, the RTA will withhold the bond and will send a notice of claim to the parties that have not signed the refund form.

The parties that have been sent the notice have 14 days to dispute the claim. The RTA provides the required dispute resolution if it receives a request for the same within 14 days. The RTA can release the undisputed amount after the claim is made.

And mostly this problem of disagreement arises due to not proper bond cleaning of the property. For releasing of the bond the first and foremost thing that the property owner expects from you is the deep cleaning of the rented property which is also stated as an important legal requirement in your rental agreement. So the focus must be put to perform proper cleaning

Now to get that excellent cleaning it is best for you to hire a professional bond cleaning company as the output provided by them is difficult to achieve by the individual on its own.
