Advertising of diplomas, term papers and essays "on order" was banned

The President signed amendments to the law "On Advertising", which prohibit the advertising of services for writing diplomas, term papers and essays on order for money. The authors of the law hope that this will help reduce the number of "gray" scientific papers that students across the country order from private individuals and give out as theirs.

An initiative to ban such advertising in April this year was made by Olga Vasilieva, who at that time held the post of Minister of Education and Science. According to her, the ban was necessary, because "the use of such things, allowing to give someone else's work for their work, is contrary to the goal-setting and the meaning of education as such."

Since 2019, illegal advertising on the streets will be forced to be removed in three hours

"It is assumed that the establishment at the federal level of a ban on advertising the provision of services for the preparation and writing of works will help to reduce the distribution of these services and increase the security of the results of intellectual activity," the explanatory note to the bill says.
