Comments: I used ChatGPT to help with my comment. Pasting here if anyone wants to copy from it: Absolutely unacceptable. The rising cost of electricity in our small town is already pushing residents to the edge — and now, with energy-hungry data centers moving in, we're expected to absorb even more of the cost? That's unjust and short-sighted. Large tech companies like Google and Amazon often negotiate special power purchase agreements and, in some areas, pay premium rates or fund infrastructure upgrades to support their operations without shifting the burden onto local residents. Why should our community be treated any differently? If data centers are going to drive up demand, they should also shoulder the financial responsibility — not everyday families who are already struggling to afford basic utilities. Our power infrastructure shouldn't be hijacked for corporate gain at the expense of the people who live here.
