

Professor,

The purpose of this letter is to explain as fully as we can the implications of publishing your course on our platform.

Your work will be freely licensed. This means that while you retain the copyright, you are licensing anyone to use or copy your material under the terms of the license.

The license we are using is the Creative Commons BY-NC-SA license, which is the same license that MIT OpenCourseWare uses. This license means that people can share and adapt the material, so long as they give appropriate credit, use it non commercially, and use the same license (more details here). Note that this license would, for example, permit anyone to train a machine learning model on the material.

We think this is the most frictionless way to share your work and get credit for it, and CC licenses are the standard — if you have questions, let us know.

You can review, edit, or remove any of the course materials that you've uploaded at any time.

Selena and Aayush
Coursetexts