9:30 - 11am

Middle School Musical Theatre "Bootcamp"

Left... Left... Left, Right, Left! 5. 6. 7. 8! Focusing on the concept of 'triple threat' (dancing, singing, and acting), this class takes bootcamp's assurance of success through repetition and drill and makes it drill sergeant-free with engaging opportunities to sharpen skills in a supportive yet professional training environment. Class sessions will integrate all elements of musical theatre performance to develop effective audition technique and expand familiarity with the musical theatre canon. Content will change for each session, guaranteeing exposure to, and experience with, musical theatre's diversity of themes, challenges, and styles. This class is a great choice for performers of all levels, a way to set a date with besties for a weekly friends' day out, and a musical motivator away from screen time and onto stage time.

Middle School Teen Company:

Saturday Afternoon Alive! Sketch Vignettes

Curious how work with improvisation can go further? This class has the answers by placing participants within a dynamic ensemble that will task them with writing and performing sketch comedy. Based in the games of improvisation and the challenge of longform, sketch comedy opens up creative ways to create Given Circumstances: character, location, relationship, and objectives within simple scripts that can be expanded as rehearsals continue. With its origins on stages worldwide, sketch comedy has long been the heart of television entertainment and now debuts as part of our Saturday classes.

Middle School & High School: The Business of Theatre Seminar for Young Actors & Their Caregivers

Understanding and navigating the ways to support your student's interest in working within Denver's networks of theatres might seem like an art unto itself. This dynamic workshop, designed for students' adult caregivers with no or limited familiarity with theatre, will provide insight and best-practices (as well as don'ts) in finding resources and strategizing the where, when, and how, of becoming a part of the Denver's theatre scene.

(Enrollment in this class does not guarantee employment with any theatre nor casting resource.)

High School Scene Study:

Gruesome Playground Injuries by Rajiv Joseph

With plays that inquire into time, relationship and connection, Rajiv Joseph's works have made him a popular choice for production in American theatres large and small. Gruesome Playground Injuries solidified Joseph's reputation as an actor's playwright. With focused exploration, this class will examine the compelling 30-year journey of the play's central characters, Kayleen and Doug', and their unconventional relationship with love, loss, self-expression, hurt, humor and the ins and outs of life's "gruesome" moments. Don't miss this opportunity to hone scene technique working from this rich text. Please note that the play, while appropriate for high school students, is a play that explores contemporary themes with contemporary language.

(All students must be in 10th-12th grade.)

High School Teen Company: Cabaret Musical Theatre Showcase

The artistry of the cabaret act has informed every aspect of contemporary entertainment: stand-up, concerts, situation comedy, parody, and the myriad of ways audience's respond to the interplay of performers' strengths in contrast and compliment to those of others within a framework of story, theme, and/or personal history. For many beloved musical theatre performers, crafting a cabaret act to showcase their talents is their truest test of their skills and performance endurance. This spring Teen Company embraces the art form as a learning-by-doing opportunity to challenge growth and experience within this rarely available genre for emergent performers. Coupling material participants will be asked to bring in with pieces chosen by teaching staff that showcase each participant's strengths and versatility, Teen Company will be a celebration of the tradition of performers crafting performance reflective of their experience, dreams, and communities.
