

London's Burning!

A Fictional Story

Sally woke up and found her bedroom was full of smoke. Her mother ran in.

“Get up Sally, we have to go!” Her mother went back into the house. Sally opened the window. People were screaming in the streets and throwing their things into carts.

“Hey, what’s happening?” Sally shouted.

“Fire!” someone shouted back. “Coming from Pudding Lane! Get out now!” Sally got changed as quickly as she could and went downstairs.

She saw her parents and sister putting things into a handcart. People were trying to put out the fire with leather buckets full of water. The fire jumped from one building to the next.

“The houses are so close together and made of wood!” Sally said. People had dropped candlesticks and burnt pots and pans in the streets.

The grocer’s boy saw Sally and said, “Some people are going to St Paul’s Cathedral to stay safe. It won’t burn because it is made of stone, not wood.”

Sally and her family carried on walking. They arrived at Moorfields. There were no buildings to burn. They were safe.

London's Burning!

A Fictional Story

Sally woke with a start. She heard strange sounds; she could smell smoke. The room was full of smoke. She coughed. What was happening? Her bedroom door opened with a bang and her mother ran in, her face white.

"Get up Sally, we have to go! Get dressed now!" Her mother disappeared back into the house.

Sally jumped from her bed and opened the window. Screams and cries came from the filthy streets below. Sally watched people throw their things into carts, horses treading the ground, keen to leave.

"Hey, what's happening?" Sally yelled.

"Fire!" her neighbour shouted back.

"Coming from Pudding Lane! Get out now Sally! No one is safe!"

Sally slammed her window shut and got changed as quickly as she could. Downstairs, she found her father, mother and sister cramming their things into a handcart. They watched people trying to put out the raging fire with leather buckets full of water. It didn't seem to make any difference, as the fire leapt from one building to the next.

"The houses are so close together and made of wood!" Sally noticed, as she tripped over candlesticks, burnt pans and odd bits of furniture that people had dropped in the streets.

The grocer's boy, Tom Winter, saw Sally and said, "Some people are going to St Paul's Cathedral to stay safe. Made of stone. Won't burn like wood." Sally nodded, but followed her parents down the dark streets.

They walked and walked. Finally, they arrived at Moorfields. It was a wide-open space with no buildings to burn. They were safe.

London's Burning!

A Fictional Story

It was dark in the early hours of Sunday morning. Sally woke with a start. Her ears filled with unfamiliar sounds; she could smell smoke. She coughed. The room looked hazy; she rubbed her eyes, but still couldn't focus properly. What was happening?

Suddenly, her bedroom door was flung open and her mother ran in, her face as white as a sheet.

"Get up Sally, we have to go! Get dressed now!" and with that, her mother disappeared back into the house, calling Sally's younger sister, Molly.

Sally jumped from her bed and pushed open the casement window. Screams and cries came from the filthy streets below. Sally watched people throwing their belongings into carts, frantic horses treading the ground, eager to get away. Parents grabbed their children and pushed them in amongst their possessions on the carts.

"Hey, what's happening?" Sally yelled.

"Fire!" her neighbour shouted back. "Seems to be coming from Pudding Lane! Get out now Sally! No one is safe!"

Sally closed her window with a bang, and hurriedly changed out of her nightdress. Once she was downstairs, her father, mother and Molly crammed their things into a handcart. They watched in horror as ordinary people tried to put out the raging fire with leather buckets full of water and the occasional water squirt.

London's Burning!

A Fictional Story

Nothing seemed to make any difference, as the fire leapt from one building to the next, burning everything in its path.

"The houses are so close together and made of wood!" Sally realised, as she scrambled over candlesticks, burnt pans and odd bits of furniture that people had dropped in their hurry to leave!

The grocer's boy, Tom Winter, saw Sally and said, "Some people are going to St Paul's Cathedral to stay safe. Made of stone. Won't burn like wood, eh?" Sally nodded but followed her parents down the dark, stinking streets. The roads were hot and they had to walk in the puddles to keep their feet cool.

They walked and walked. Finally, they arrived at Moorfields. It was a wide-open space with no buildings to burn. They were safe.
