Writing a Formal Email

What Is a Formal Email?

Search

A formal email is an email that is written using a formal tone of voice. It usually avoids slang or chatty language.

A formal email can be used to:

- make a complaint;
- write to a business to request something;
- write to a politician about an important issue;
- write to someone that you don't know.

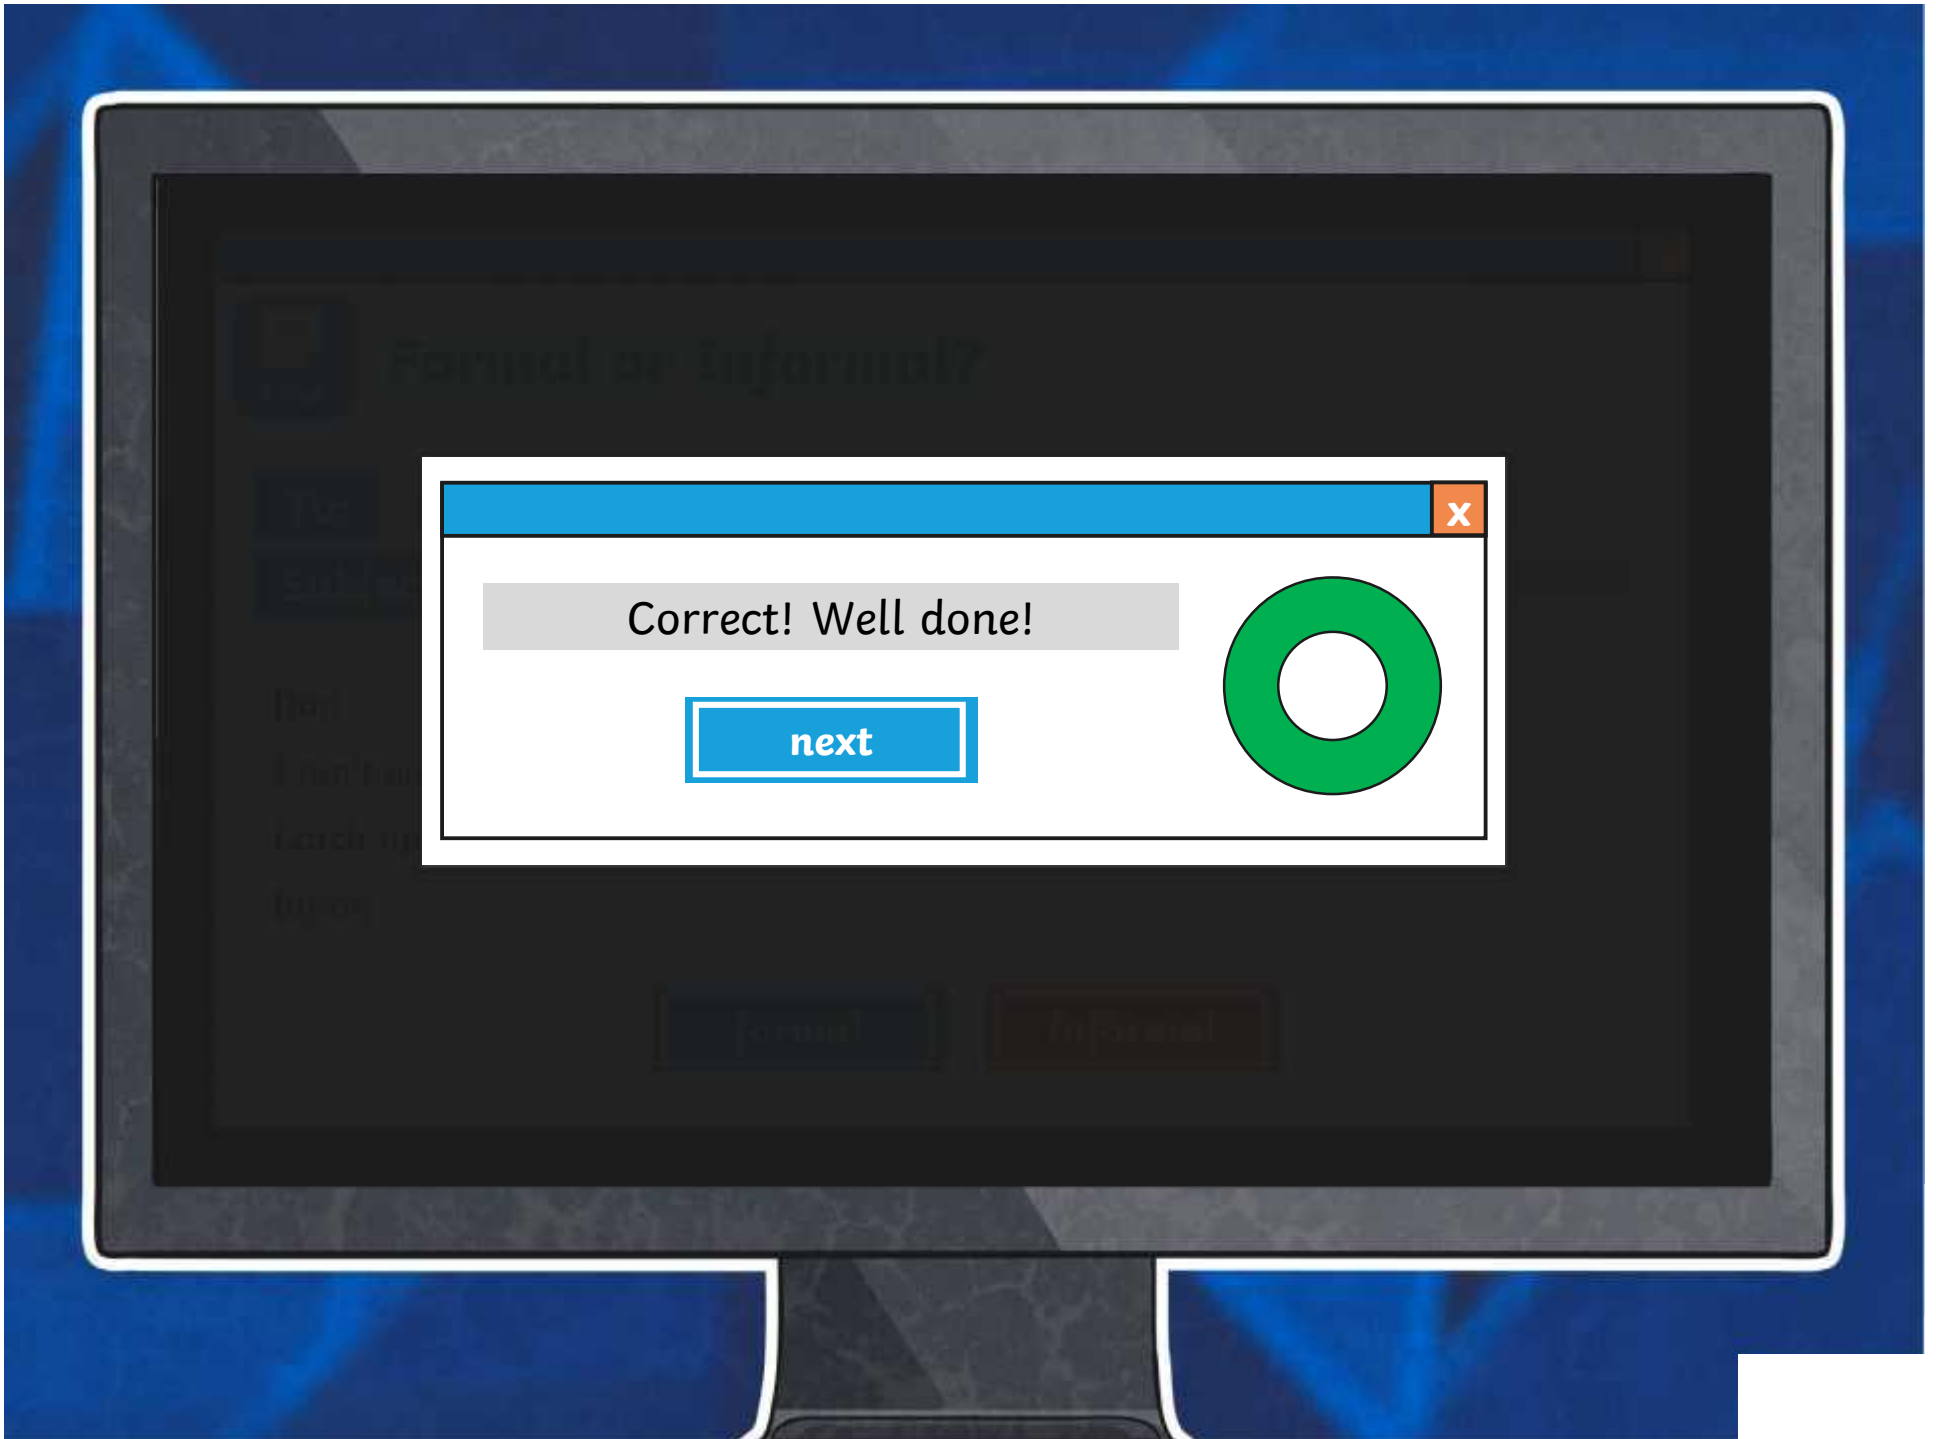

Can you think of another scenario where you might choose to write a formal email?

Formal Email Example

To: threelittlepigs@talemail.com

Subject: Update for Case No. 3003

Dear Pig 1, Pig 2 and Pig 3,

I am writing to update you with regards to case no. 3003: The Three Little Pigs vs The Big Bad Wolf. As you will be aware from our last conversation, there were a number of issues that needed to be addressed before a formal complaint could be made.

Formal Email Example

To: threelittlepigs@talemail.com

Subject: Update for Case No. 3003

Firstly, there was the issue of proof. It was initially my understanding that, although two of your homes were completely destroyed, there were no eyewitnesses aside from yourselves. Following Pig 2's suggestion, I have since been in touch with Montgomery Mole who, according to you, was digging in a nearby field at the time.

Formal Email Example

To: threelittlepigs@talemail.com

Subject: Update for Case No. 3003

Mr Mole has agreed to provide a witness statement with regards to the 'huffing and puffing' that he heard that day.

Secondly, there was the issue of The Big Bad Wolf's whereabouts. You will be pleased to know that we have been recently informed that he is currently residing in the woods near Grandma's house.

Formal Email Example

To: threelittlepigs@talemail.com

Subject: Update for Case No. 3003

A member of our firm is taking a trip out there this evening; I will keep you updated with their findings.

Finally, there was the slight issue of payment. As you are aware, our services require a fee. Although your offer to build me a new home was very kind, I would like to point out that this is not a good idea given your current predicament.

The Subject

When writing an email, you're asked to include a subject. This gives the recipient an idea of what your email is going to be about before they've opened it.

Make sure that your subject is short, clear and to the point. Something like...
