Can you use sound effects to record a scary voice for Halloween?

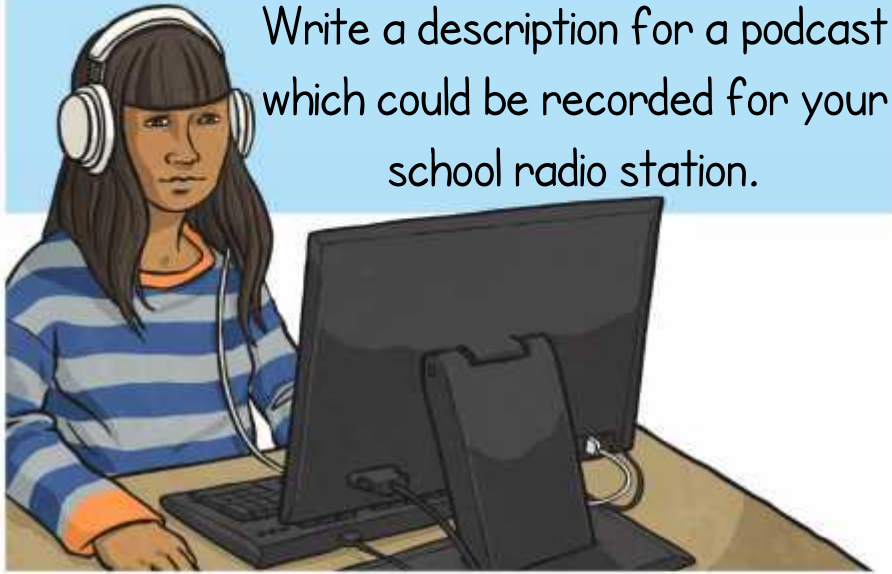

Can you use sound effects to make a voice recording sound like a chipmunk?

Can you use sound effects to make a voice recording sound like it has an echo?

Can you change the tone and pitch of your voice to make your expression more interesting, in the style of a good radio presenter?

Write a description for a podcast which could be recorded for your school radio station.

Write an advert for a school radio station, persuading people to tune in and listen!

Design or draw a new radio station logo. Think of a name and slogan.

Research and write about a famous radio presenter from a local or national radio station.

Make a glossary/mini-dictionary of technical words related to a radio station or sound recording. Can you write definitions for them?

Write a letter to a radio station or radio DJ telling them about your work. You could ask some questions too!

Practise your interviewing technique with a partner. One person can be the interviewer while the other plays the part of a famous sports person musician or TV star!

Write a script and/or record a news report about something in your local area. It could be serious, funny or just interesting.

The image displays a digital audio workstation (DAW) interface. At the top, the word "edit" is written in a large, black, sans-serif font. Below this is a waveform editor showing two channels of audio. The waveform is primarily orange, but a central segment is highlighted in blue, indicating it is selected for editing. A vertical white line marks the end of the selected segment. Below the waveform is a control bar with several circular buttons: a double left arrow (stop), a red circle (record), an orange square (stop), a green right arrow (play), and a double right arrow (next). To the right of these buttons is a digital time display showing "0:03:49". Further right are two volume sliders, one for the left channel (L) and one for the right channel (R), both with a central knob and a scale from minus to plus.
