Re: Gummy Bear Vandalism in the High School Office

This morning I arrived in my office to find a veritable deluge of Haribo gummy bears, it appears that someone (or a group of individuals) entered my office between the hours of 5 p.m. yesterday and 6:30 a.m. today and deposited thousands of pounds of gummy bears. The candy covered the entire floor of my office and was piled about half a meter high. Unfortunately, the gummy bears congealed in the heat, creating huge clumps of gelatinous candy. The maintenance workers have spent hours attempting to clear the candy from my office, every surface is sticky and my office still reeks of high fructose corn syrup. I am writing this memo from Justin Walsh's office, mine will be uninhabitable for several days while the carpet and furniture are replaced.

While I enjoy a practical joke as much as the next person, I do feel that this particular prank oversteps the boundaries of good sense and taste. The person or persons responsible for this prank will receive serious consequences, if the perpetrator is a student he or she will be promptly expelled from school.

Several suspects have been identified, the suspected perpetrators boasted on their Facebook statuses in the wee hours of the morning, "XXXX never wants to look at another gummy bear again." This evidence is strong but circumstantial, anyone with knowledge of this deed is encouraged to come forward with information.
