The Soldier Who Still Walks the Road

Let me tell you a true story. Many years ago, I had an aunt. My aunt, who was very old, lived in an isolated house far from the town.

One day, she became sick, so I went to stay with her while she was getting better.

While I was staying there, I did all the housework. One night, I was doing the washing-up when I saw something move out of the corner of my eye.

I turned around and saw something incredible. A Roman soldier was walking through the kitchen. He was carrying a sword and shield, and looking straight ahead.

While he was walking past me, I suddenly felt very, very cold. I simply stared at him as he disappeared into the wall.

I ran into my aunt's room, but she was sleeping. Since she was getting better from her illness, I decided not to wake her up.

That night, I couldn't sleep. I lay awake in my bed thinking about the Roman soldier. I was still lying awake when the clock struck 7 a.m.

In the morning, I told my aunt about the Roman soldier. "Ahhh, you saw the soldier! I often see him. But don't worry, he won't hurt you. He just walks in and walks out, always on the same path."

I stayed with my aunt for three more weeks but I didn't see the Roman soldier again.

One night, many years later, I was having dinner with a friend and he mentioned ghosts, so I told him the story of the Roman soldier. "Where did this happen?" he asked me. I told him.

"Well, that explains it!" he said. "Many years ago there was a Roman road that ran through that village - and that house."

I was stunned. "I guess that the Roman soldier still walks the same road..." I said.

Finish this ghost story. Try to use the past continuous at least twice.

I grew up in a very small town. There were about two hundred people and nothing ever happened. It was so boring that we would ride around on our bikes until it was night time. My friends and I often used to go to a huge abandoned house on the edge of the town, to throw sticks through the windows or play games in the garden. One night, as I was passing the house by myself late at night, I noticed something strange. At the top of the house, a light was shining.
