We all want to build and sustain a strong environmental movement. To do this we must have a place to share and heal from feelings about climate change and any discouragement we feel about taking needed action. We need support to maintain and build our connections with each other and address difficulties together. And we need a place to heal from the effects of our oppressive societies.

In these caucuses, we will:

- Among others who share that same identities or constituencies,
- Share the ways oppression and internalized oppression affect our ability to do this work and to involve people of all backgrounds, including people of color and indigenous people,
- Learn about the theory and practice the tools of Re-evaluation Counseling (see reverse) as a strategy to address the difficulties in our movements and our organizing.
