Summary

The pamphlet was given to two caregivers:

Mrs. Corleone and Mrs. Johnson

They are LGBTQ parents in their late twenties and both work at a local factory.

They are the parents of five children: Edward (7), Kennedy (3), George (6), Jim (4), and Lucy (6).

These parents expressed great interest in understanding the studies in the pamphlet and were curious about the practical ways of reducing lead exposure to their infants. The two inquired on the best ways they could add barriers between their infants and lead sources. They seemed to have considered the advice and promised to do something about the possible lead sources in their homes.

Recommendations may include producing a web-based version of the pamphlet and ensuring that it is displayed on social platforms. The evidences that were provided should be explained in way that is completely comprehensible to the parents/caregivers.
