Some punctuation marks are exceptionally common yet difficult in their right usage. I will discuss three of these punctuation marks here to advise the writers on how to incorporate them while writing the essays.

The punctuation marks I am here to discuss are the colons (:), semicolons (;), and dashes (-).

If you are in your school and are often assigned different essays to write, you probably come across these marks habitually. However, do you also know where and why they are used? What is the reason for using these punctuation marks in essays? What punctuation mark do you think is the most common and why?

Yet, colons and semi-colons, and dashes are no less about the writing of essays. Their usage is extremely crucial and any off-base placement could make the entire text vague and unclear.

Colons (:)

In any writing, you use colons while introducing a series of lists in the text. The same goes for essays, in an essay when you are to endlessly introduce any list you have to put a colon before the list starts.

1. To introduce a series of items and to introduce items. For example, different tones are used in this painting: blue, black, pink, orange, and beige.

2. It is also used to separate two independent clauses where the ensuing clause either explains, expands, illustrates, or paraphrases what is stated in the first. For example, John apprehended that his worst fear was about to come valid: his daughter was kidnapped for ransom.

Here, the information introduced after the colon shows fear of John in the form of an independent clause.

3. One of the common reasons for the colon that you might be extremely familiar with is its utilization in the formal letter. It is used in the letters trailed behind the salutation. This utilization of the colon is wildly common in formal and business letters.

This is not used in the essays however sometimes certain quotations in the parenthesis may have any such salutation quotes.

Semi-colon (;)

Semicolons are used to separate two independent clauses that share firmly related ideas or ideas. It is also used to list the complex phrases and ideas which have commas in them. You ought to remember that a semicolon is more like a comma having real meaning and a colon has enhanced flexibility.

Some of the motivations behind the semi-colon are according to the following.

1. Used to associate at least two ideas in a sentence that share an equal rank or position in their ideas and ideas.

2. Joins two independent clauses with transitional phrases and conjunctive.

3. It is also used in the series of relatively complex lists, and is longer and is separated by commas.

4. Also used to join the independent clause which is joined by the coordinating conjunctions. Such sentences are longer; therefore, are associated with the utilization of a semi-colon to clarify the meaning of the sentence.

One common mistake in the essays probably is the confusion between the usage of the semicolon and commas. Semicolons are used before the coordinating conjunctions and also when the transition elements are within a sentence. However, understudies often use commas in their place; in this way, disrupting the meanings.

Dashes (- -)

Dashes are used in pairs instead of commas or you can say to replace the commas to write an interrupting phrase or parenthetical phrase. They are used to make the readers have an emphatic feel and to make the readers revolve more around the information provided inside the marks.

Do you worry about how to incorporate dashes when I write my essay? Make an effort not to worry about it. However it is not commonly used; therefore, understudies are not exceptionally familiar with its usage. Yet, as you most likely are aware that when you write an essay, a great deal of information is introduced in parenthesis.
