

Ending Live Export

Australia needs to end live sheep export. The Government needs to legislate a final date now.

Sheep will suffer no matter what legislation is in place. The long journeys, the remoteness of the ship and the extreme temperature changes onboard is not an environment for any living creature. Overcrowding has been frequently documented and the animals' access to food and water is severely compromised. Inhumane slaughter practices once they disembark has been proven multiple times.

For the certainty of farmers and businesses, the Government must legislate an end date NOW to finally end this cruel business. Prolonging the decision prolongs uncertainty for Australian farmers and further damages our international reputation.

This is the right thing to do.

Regards,

A solid black rectangular box used to redact the signature of the sender.