

Stopping live animal exports

1. The phase out of live animal export should be carried out as soon as possible.
2. Clearly it is despicably cruel, and evidently Australia are behind this ban and have been for many years. So we would be a bit more respected as a country, following in the footsteps of other countries, notably New Zealand. Defending this trade undermines the public's trust in Australia's agricultural sector.
3. Many people voted for a labour government because of the desire to end this horrendous cruelty,, including myself, family and friends.
4. The phase out must begin as soon as possible. Every delay means more sheep being exposed to unnecessary suffering, then if they do survive the nightmare journey, are subjected then to the most inexcusable torture, including conscious slaughtering.
