Dear Sir/Madam,

with reference to the proposed phase out of live export I am a concerned member of the community and would like to mention the following.

The phase out must start as soon as possible. Any delay will result in further unnecessary suffering for the animals involved.

Generally speaking the Australian public want live export to end as they see it as being too cruel and unnecessary. So the phase out must be legislated and should commence in this term of parliament.

Labour received many votes from animal lovers last election. Don't let them down or you will lose their trust.

The live export trade in general is inherently cruel and even when regulations are followed sheep suffer from heat stress at sea and painful un-stunned slaughter overseas.
