

I ask that you to please commence the phase out of this horrific practice as soon as possible. Any delay means sheep continue to suffer from not only the stress of sea travel, but the fully conscious slaughter when in these countries.

We have been given this guarantee now we need to have in legislation and followed through by your term in parliament.

I have no issue with government helping transition and support farmers away from this trade.

New Zealand lead the way to ending this barbaric practice, something the international stage expected from Australia. The government's slow reaction to the public outcry undermines Australian trust in the agricultural sector.

We have seen time and again the suffering of these poor creatures, regardless of regulations. The horrific condition they are forced to endure while at sea. The worse treatment when they arrive at the destination. These are creatures that care for their young, protect each other and form bonds with each other. They are well aware of what is happening to them.

Show us the people who voted and placed our trust in you that we are not being misled

I voted Labour because of this very policy, please don't let me down.
