To whom it may concern

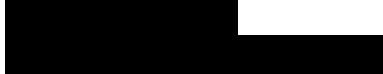

I would like to support the Albanese government on its promise to end the export of live animals and it is on this basis that I voted for the Labour Government on Election Day. I would like the process of ridding Australia of this horrible, cruel practice to start as soon as possible and quickly be resolved so that animals can no longer suffer the way they do at present.

I appreciate that this will affect farmers who gain their livelihood from the practice of live export and support appropriate transition funding.

All Australians with any empathy for the suffering of a living being must abhor this terrible practice and the sooner it ends the better.

With regards,

Eve Martin
