

Phase out of live sheep exports by sea

Why oh why do governments take so long to act on Australian public and animal welfare bodies calling out for banning the barbaric live sheep export by sea transport, when the evidence against the export is overwhelming to say the least.

At last, the government has agreed to ban the barbaric and cruel practice, but for some reason must appoint a panel to decide how and when the cessation will take place. Really? Just advise your decision to the parties who are guilty of animal cruelty to stop it forthwith – that is what the people of Australia elect you to do, not just waste time and taxpayers' money on committees and panels!

I implore you to act immediately, and not be subservient to those who are guilty of animal cruelty and who probably have cried poor in respect of lost contracts.

Yours faithfully,

Leslie Moore
