The total value of Australian Prosecco production is estimated at around $205 million to December 2021, growing from a small base of just over $60 million in 2017. Around 95% of this is currently sold on the Australian domestic market. Prosecco has been recognized as the name of a grape for centuries, but not as a geographical indication (GI) Protecting the term as a geographical indication is a cynical attempt to avoid competition from Australian wine producers.
