As a retired career winemaker with [REDACTED] and with a special interest in alternative varieties I consider the Italian initiative to be an opportunistic slight of hand! Our company has long been recognised for successful innovation in alternative varieties by consumers and the wine industry generally. As such I have had formal roles with the Australian Wine Research Institute, the CSIRO vine breeding program, the Victorian Department of Agriculture grape variety importing programs, and the Charles Sturt University. My passion was pursued with several trips to Europe, including Italy, where I was hosted most generously by numerous wine company owners, their winemakers and viticulturists. All the while the variety that is generally known as Prosecco was a grape variety, not a district or region. Only in very recent years has the name Glera come to my attention and Prosecco claimed as a regional name! As many submissions will attest the grape variety Prosecco has gained considerable popularity in the Australian wine market and is now responsible for considerable economic benefit to the industry and the Nation. I implore those who represent us in this irresponsible claim by the Italians to do everything possible to resolve it in Australia's favour. [REDACTED]
