The EU GI name is used in Australia as the name of a grape variety, plant variety, or an animal breed.

Q9. Please provide further details, based on the grounds of objection for each GI. (If submission based on existing trade mark please provide trade mark number. If submission based on unregistered trade mark please provide evidence of use on Australia).

Australia has a great climate for wine production, with many regions already producing high-quality wines. The same can be said for Prosecco, which thrives in similar conditions to those found in Australia. With the right techniques, Australian producers create a distinct and delicious Australian-style prosecco that could rival the best of Italy. The name Prosecco, has been cemented into the Australian wine language. A recognised and well-loved varietal. The demand for Prosecco has increased significantly in recent years, making it one of the most popular sparkling wines in the world, even outselling Champagne.

Q28. OtherAny other information on the impacts EU GIs may have on Australian businesses or industry.

By producing Prosecco in Australia, it can reduce the need for expensive imports and create jobs within the Australian wine industry. In Australia, Prosecco is the 8th most produced white grape variety. More locally, The King Valley and Murray Darling-Swan Hill regions are the largest producing areas. To cease growing and production of Prosecco in these areas would have devastating economic impact to those communities. There is a growing interest in sustainable agriculture, and Australia is well positioned to produce prosecco using environmentally friendly techniques. With careful management of resources, Australian producers could create a sustainable and profitable industry that supports local communities. Producing Prosecco in Australia could help to promote Australian wine on a global scale. By creating a distinct and high quality product, Australian producers could capture the attention of wine lovers worldwide and enhance the reputation of Australian wine as a whole.
