Dear ,

In light of the speed of growing momentum of climate change there can only be a well coordinated approach from across all levels of government, linked in with the proponent companies, to get on track taking the required action to create infrastructure needed for a long range renewable energy sector. This will benefit all of us from small scale energy users right through to major companies.

Renewables are now cheaper than fossil fuels to create and to run for the end user. Fossil fuel subsidies are wasted funds that would be better used for renewables infrastructure.

There can be no real climate action without this infrastructure and done right the benefits are immediate and sustainable long into the future. The planet is entering a very different age where more people on the planet means a totally different approach is needed for powering modern life. The only way this can happen is with the united investment and action of government and proponent companies.

The risks of inaction now due to lack of social license will be a telling point for the future generations. Intelligence and progressive thinking is needed, if history is to see us in a positive light. We have the technology and knowledge, the question is do we, government and big business, have the will for major change? Do we steward the present with an eye to the future or do we just walk away and do nothing?

Yours sincerely,
