- For educational purposes only.
  This document shows where classic chart lines — trendlines and channels — are being tested on real price data today. It is NOT investment advice and NOT a recommendation to buy, sell or hold any security.
- Prepared with AI assistance, with a human in the loop.
  Every line, touch and level here was detected and drawn by software with AI assistance, and a person on our team reviews the book.
- A line is not a prediction.
  A trendline or channel line can hold or break on any touch; a 3rd, 4th or later touch does not make either outcome more certain. Each card shows the level at which the line counts as broken. The announcements under each chart are AI summaries of exchange filings — read the filing itself before relying on one.
- Verify everything yourself. Not SEBI-registered advice.
  Check the price and the line on your own broker's chart. Flash Finance is not a SEBI-registered adviser or research analyst; investing carries risk of loss.

How to read a channel test

A stock in a channel swings between two parallel lines; each return to a line that held before is a test of it.

Parallel channel — price swinging between two parallel lines

The rules this book uses (daily candles)

1. One line joins two swing points of one side (two swing lows, or two swing highs), 20 to 250 sessions apart, with no candle cutting through it by more than 1% between them.
2. The other line runs PARALLEL to it through the furthest point on the other side between them. The channel is 5% to 35% of the price wide; it can rise, fall or run sideways.
3. A touch is a candle within 1% of a line, once price has swung back to the middle of the channel since that line's previous touch, and at least 10 sessions later.
4. The channel is broken by a close more than 1% outside it, or a wick more than 2% outside. A broken channel is dropped.
5. Listed: a 3rd or later touch of a line in the last 5 sessions (or price still sitting on it), with the other line already touched at least twice, and the LTP still in the 30% of the channel next to the tested line. At most 25 per line.
6. Best fit — how precisely the touches sit on the lines, how regularly price has visited them, how many touches and how long the channel has held.

On each card

LOWER LINE price is at the channel's lower line (support). A close more than 1% BELOW it breaks the channel.

UPPER LINE price is at the channel's upper line (resistance). A close more than 1% ABOVE it breaks the channel.

POSITION where the LTP sits inside the channel: 0% = on the lower line, 100% = on the upper line.
