- For educational purposes only.
  This document shows where classic chart lines — trendlines and channels — are being tested on real price data today. It is NOT investment advice and NOT a recommendation to buy, sell or hold any security.
- Prepared with AI assistance, with a human in the loop.
  Every line, touch and level here was detected and drawn by software with AI assistance, and a person on our team reviews the book.
- A line is not a prediction.
  A trendline or channel line can hold or break on any touch; a 3rd, 4th or later touch does not make either outcome more certain. Each card shows the level at which the line counts as broken. The announcements under each chart are AI summaries of exchange filings — read the filing itself before relying on one.
- Verify everything yourself. Not SEBI-registered advice.
  Check the price and the line on your own broker's chart. Flash Finance is not a SEBI-registered adviser or research analyst; investing carries risk of loss.

How to read a trendline touch

A line that price has respected 2 times becomes a level many traders watch; the 3rd and later touches are when it gets tested.

Falling line — from the top, along lower highs

Rising line — from the bottom, along higher lows

The rules this book uses (daily candles)

1. Swing high / swing low — the highest high (lowest low) of 5 sessions on either side.
2. A falling line joins two swing HIGHS, the later one lower; a rising line joins two swing LOWS, the later one higher. They are 15 to 250 sessions apart, the line slopes at least ~7.5% a year, and no candle between them cuts through it by more than 1%.
3. A touch is a candle whose high (falling line) or low (rising line) comes within 1% of the line, after price had moved at least 3% away from it and at least 10 sessions after the previous touch. The two swing points are touches 1 and 2.
4. The line is broken by a close more than 1% through it, or a wick more than 2% through it. A broken line is dropped.
5. Listed: the 3rd, 4th, 5th or 6th touch made in the last 5 sessions (or price still sitting on the line), the best-fitting line per stock, at most 25 per list.
6. Best fit — how precisely the touches sit on the line, how evenly they are spaced over its life, how many there are and how long the line has held.

On each card

FALLING · RESISTANCE — price is under a falling line drawn from the top. A close more than 1% ABOVE the line breaks it.

RISING · SUPPORT — price is above a rising line drawn from the bottom. A close more than 1% BELOW the line breaks it.

ON THE LINE / TOUCHED — on the line = the latest candle is within 1% of it; touched = the touch came in the last 5 sessions.
