History Of Bangladesh Tea

The first home-grown tea was made and tasted near the Karnaphuli River in Chittagong in 1843. Commercial cultivation of tea began in the Mulnicherra Estate in Sylhet in 1857. The Surma River Valley in the Sylhet region emerged as the centre of tea cultivation in Eastern Bengal.

The main tea growing areas lie to the east of the Ganga - Jumma flood plain in the hill areas bordering Cachar tea growing area of India. Most of the tea grows in Sylhet in the North East in the so called Seven Valleys; tea is also grown in Chittagong & the Hill Tracts. Tea is grown at only 80-300 feet above sea level.

The seasonal nature of rainfall and temperature results in an uneven pattern of tea production. Annual rainfall is the range of 90-180 inches and it falls mainly between May and October when it is more than adequate, so that almost 80% of the crop is manufactured in the six months during June to November.

The dry season from mid-October to mid-May is divided into a Cool Season to mid-February and this is followed by a very hot desiccating season until mid-May which causes severe stress in unshaded tea on southerly to westerly slopes.

Recently North Bengal (Panchagarh, Thakurgaon, Rangpur) Districts there has been a great proliferation in tea cultivation in the plains. So, currently tea is divided into three regions in terms of production.

1. Sylhet region with small hills and medium hills.
2. Chattogram region with small mounds and medium hills.
3. North Bengal region.
