MAP PACKAGING

Modified Atmospheric Packaging

Modified Atmospheric Packaging (MAP) is a technique used in food packaging to extend the shelf life of perishable products. It involves altering the atmosphere inside the package to slow down the oxidation and spoilage processes. Commonly adjusted factors include oxygen levels, carbon dioxide levels, and humidity to create an optimal environment for preserving the freshness and quality of the packaged food.

Thermoforming Vacuum Packing Machine

A Thermoforming vacuum packing machine combines thermoforming and vacuum sealing processes to create custom-shaped packaging for food. It removes air from the package to extend shelf life by reducing exposure to oxygen, preserving freshness and preventing spoilage.

The modular design of Thermoforming machine allows them to be tailored to individual needs of the end off.

Application is to preserve foods like dairy products, meat, sea food, dates, dry fruits & convenience foods etc.
