NFC Juices

vs. concentrated juices

Concentrated – what does it mean?

Concentrated juices are made in an hours-long process of evaporating water at high temperatures, which results in the loss of most of the vitamins, antioxidants and polyphenols that fruit contain. It is not uncommon for lower quality fruit to be used in production. In order to obtain the final juice, it is reconstituted from the concentrated juice by adding water. All this makes the product cheaper.

More than juice

Premium Rosa NFC juices are created with specific health-enhancing effects in mind. In Premium Rosa recipes, you will not find concentrated juices, concentrates, glucose-fructose syrup, colourings, flavourings or any preservatives. It is estimated that juices reconstituted from concentrated juices contain more than three times less fruit than NFC juices.

What does NFC stand for?

NFC juices are directly pressed from fruit and not reconstituted from concentrate. The acronym NFC means 'not from concentrate'. The processed ingredients are sorted, washed, pressed and poured into a vessel. This process resembles traditional juice making at home. This simple method ensures that the juices retain their nutritional and health-enhancing properties.
