Syracuse Men's Basketball announces self-imposed postseason ban for 2015

The Syracuse University Orange men's basketball team will be staying home for this year's postseason after the university self-imposed a ban in response to an ongoing NCAA investigation into past wrongdoing. The ban prohibits participation in the NCAA and ACC tournaments, as well as the NIT.

Syracuse has been under investigation since 2007 when it self-reported possible NCAA violations in its football and basketball programs. School officials said that none of the conduct being investigated involves current players.
