In the News: UCLA Football Coach Fired Following NCAA Violations

An associate football coach at UCLA knowingly arranged for and provided impermissible services to two potential student-athletes. The coach paid for housing at a local hotel and training services at a facility owned by a former NFL player. Impermissible off-campus recruiting contacts at high schools and local restaurants took place, and the coach even allowed a recruit to take a second official visit valued at $500.

UCLA originally self-imposed penalties including suspending the coach for Spring practice and recruiting season in 2015, reducing their recruiting days for Spring 2015, and reducing their number of official visits for the 2015-16 academic year. The NCAA issued a two-year show cause order to the coach as well as a $5,000 fine, and publicly reprimanded the university.

On January 16th, 2017, the coach was fired by UCLA. Head Coach Jim Mora released a statement saying the situation was “difficult”, but said the decision was “in the best interests of the program”.
