Outlook (2013-14)

Sadie Murren (pronounced MURR-en) enters her second season at Nebraska hoping to make greater contributions to the Husker back court.

The 5-8 sophomore guard from Colon, Neb., made early contributions for the Huskers as a freshman before being sidelined with an injury. She returned late in the year to play in both the Big Ten and NCAA tournaments.

For the season, she appeared in 18 games, averaging 1.5 points and 0.9 rebounds.

Murren carries a strong work ethic and is an outstanding long range shooter. She is also a tough, aggressive defender who could be counted on to solidify a Husker back court that must replace 2013 WNBA first-round pick Lindsey Moore.

"Sadie can shoot the three, and she can get to the basket, but I think it is her toughness that sets her apart," Nebraska Coach Connie Yori said. "She battled injuries a little bit her freshman year, but she had a good offseason and we're expecting to see more from Sadie this season."

Freshman (2012-13)

Murren averaged 1.5 points and 0.9 rebounds per game off the bench, while hitting seven three-pointers in 18 games. She had missed 12 straight games with a back injury before returning to the court in NU's Big Ten quarterfinal win over Iowa on March 8. She added a steal in one minute of action in NU's NCAA Tournament first-round win over Chattanooga March 23.

Murren had a career-high nine points on 3-of-4 shooting from long range in a win over Northern Arizona on Nov. 16. That followed an eight-point effort with a pair of threes in a win over Temple on Nov. 11. She scored all eight points in a span of 3:37, helping to fuel a 17-3 NU surge in the first half. She opened her career with five points, three rebounds and one assist in a win over North Carolina A&T on Nov. 9. She added a career-best two assists and tied a career high with three rebounds Nov. 20.

Murren had three points, two rebounds, an assist and a steal while tying a career high with 21 minutes played against Oral Roberts Dec. 20.
