In fiscal year 2019, Youth Farm had 12 board member volunteers, 6 board committee volunteers, and 350 program/garden volunteers, and 32 fundraising event volunteers.

Form 990, Part III, Line 2

Youth Farm underwent two major changes in 2019. First, we increased our partnership work with the Saint Paul Public Schools (SPPS) Grow Our Own (GROW) Project. This project aims to engage all SPPS students with high quality food and agriculture education by connecting gardens, cafeterias, and classrooms. Throughout the school year, youth planted seed starts in the greenhouse, transplanted those starts into school gardens, and assisted in maintaining growing spaces. In addition to school year programming, we also engaged with SPPS students during the summer. Each week, Project LEAD participants headed to the Jackson Elementary School garden in Frogtown to assist Youth Farmers in planting, weeding, and maintaining their space. Project LEAD teen staff also ate and played games with the students, creating strong relationships and becoming role models for the younger youth.

The second major change we underwent came to fruition in the summer of 2019. Historically, we have run a "summer camp" style program when school lets out, but this year we moved away from that approach and took on a much more flexible model. This year's summer programming aimed to fit seamlessly into the rest of growing season programming, instead of standing out as a separate segment of the year. Taking on more flexible programming throughout the summer enabled Project LEAD and Farm Stewards to make more decisions regarding programming, increased the number of community events we were able to engage in, and allowed us to pilot new work with school partners.

Form 990, Part III, Line 3

In Youth Farm's 25 year history, we have made many changes to our programs, consistently priding ourselves on being an organization that sees the need for change and makes it.

There are two large changes that took place at Youth Farm in 2019: the transition of South Minneapolis garden spaces and the start of a new summer program model.

Youth Farm's first garden programs took place in 1995 in the Lyndale neighborhood of South Minneapolis. Over the next two and a half decades, our programs expanded to the Southside neighborhood of Powderhorn, the West Side and Frogtown neighborhoods of St. Paul, and North Minneapolis. As programming flourished in these neighborhoods and more and more youth and community partners got involved, Youth Farm grew into what it is today.

This year, as numerous community partnerships continued to grow stronger and stronger, the staff at Youth Farm took a step back to evaluate the organization's capacity as well as the community's needs. Through evaluation, it was realized that community partners in South Minneapolis were better equipped to manage the garden spaces that Youth Farm had historically run, while still keeping youth involved. A great example of this is the PTA at Lyndale Community School taking over the management of the school garden. Many of the parents taking on leadership roles in the garden are neighborhood residents themselves and are well equipped to understand the needs of the community while working in tandem with their children, who are students at the school. Our main office is still located in the Lyndale neighborhood of South Minneapolis, so we are excited to be able to continue to nourish our long-standing partnerships while watching how spaces are reimaged and transformed.

The second major change we made in 2019 was to our summer programming. This year, instead of running a "summer camp" style program, we decided to approach summer programming in a much more flexible way while working in partnership with summer school programs and community events.

There are several reasons we made this change. First, we realized that restructuring programming would give us the opportunity to reach more youth who have limited access to quality summer activities. Second, we recognized the opportunity and interest in bringing Youth Farm programming to public summer schools, which would enable us to reach more neighborhood youth. And lastly, we saw an opportunity to deepen our teen and young adult programs. With this new, more flexible model, Project LEAD participants actively led summer school programs in St. Paul and community events in Minneapolis, while Farm Stewards assisted with these programs as well as managed farm spaces and community partnerships. Project LEAD and Farm Stewards have engaged in these types of activities for many summers, but a more flexible model has allowed them to pursue more opportunities while also giving them more autonomy and choice over the programs that Youth Farm runs.

The changes we made in 2019 link directly to our organizational goals. Assisting community partners in taking over South Minneapolis farm spaces created a sense of community connectedness as well as offered increased opportunities for parents to engage in school garden work. In addition, implementing a more flexible program model during the summer months added another layer of leadership development, as youth took on an active role in deciding which activities were worth pursuing and piloted those ideas.

Moving into 2020, we feel strong and grounded, ready to take on another year of youth leadership development, community building, and food access work.

Youth Farm successfully grows not only young leaders, but also food and community by engaging youth from Minneapolis and St. Paul in urban farming and community organizing. Youth as young as nine participate in programming and have the opportunity to stay involved until the age of 24, building new leadership skills every step of the way. Our programs are based on a unique progressive program model which places youth in four specific cohorts based on their age: Youth Farmers (age 9-11), All Stars (age 12-13), Project LEAD (age 14-18), and Farm Stewards (age 19-24). Each cohort works together and builds on the last, ensuring that youth are taking on age appropriate responsibilities that are challenging, engaging, and effective. No matter whether a young person is engaged with Youth Farm programming for one week or ten years, they will leave knowing that their voice was heard and that they have the power to be an effective leader in their community. In 2019, Youth Farm engaged over 1,500 Twin Cities youth in food, community, and leadership programming.

Youth Farm's mission is simple - we farm to grow. We farm to grow food, community, and, most importantly, young leaders. Youth learn to plant, grow, cook, and responsibly distribute local produce while developing real world leadership skills along the way by using food as a catalyst for change within their communities.

Through farm and food programming, Youth Farm strives to accomplish the following goals:

- 1.To develop and nurture healthy relationships;
- 2.To create neighborhood connectedness and opportunities for contribution;
- 3.To contribute to the positive identity of children and youth;
- 4.To promote healthy bodies and minds; and
- 5.To build young leaders.

Growing Leaders:

Youth Farm's progressive program model has proven to be both effective and engaging, as youth have named that they feel appropriately challenged at each stage. Although the tasks in each cohort build upon the tasks from the last, youth who are involved during any step of the process will take away important food access and leadership skills.

Youth Farmers (age 9-11): Youth Farmers work to master gardening and cooking skills while developing strong interpersonal skills. They also learn about how food choices impact their lives and communities and share this knowledge with their peers and families.

All Stars (age 12-13): All Stars take on intentional, specific program and neighborhood leadership roles while focusing on cultural responsiveness skills and becoming role models for younger youth. They also learn about food systems while taking part in the decision making process surrounding food distribution in each neighborhood.

Project LEAD (age 14-18): Throughout the Project LEAD program, high school-aged youth take part in a school year internship followed by hourly summer employment. Project LEAD participants manage programming for Youth Farmers and All Stars while also designing farms, seeding, planting, weeding, harvesting, and distributing thousands of pounds of fresh produce. Additionally, these young leaders engage their peers, families, and neighbors at community events, actively learning to use food as a tool for change. Through this stage of Youth Farm programming, participants develop mentorship, conflict resolution, leadership, community organizing, and career skills.

Farm Stewards (age 19-24): The Farm Stewards employment program is the final stage of Youth Farm's progressive program model. Farm Stewards, who are often Project LEAD graduates, are young adults that Youth Farm supports to become social change leaders and community organizers within their neighborhoods. Throughout this program, Farm Stewards focus on a combination of increasing program opportunities in their neighborhoods with high level leadership, building workforce skills, and developing expertise within the context of food, social change, and professional youth development.

Youth Farm designed the Farm Stewards program to emphasize a more personal and flexible approach to leadership development. We aim to include Farm Stewards at different stages of their personal, educational, and professional development, including those pursuing a long-term career in youth work, students who are earning higher education credit through their Farm Steward employment, and young adults exploring a specific area of Youth Farm's work in farming, community organizing, nonprofit management, etc.

Growing Food:

Through Youth Farm programming, youth grow food in three Twin Cities neighborhoods: North Minneapolis and the Frogtown and West Side neighborhoods of St. Paul. With the vision of building community, we manage and/or assist on 10 urban farm plots in partnership with a multitude of organizations including the Minneapolis Community & Technical College Herbal Studies program, La Puerta Abierta United Methodist Church, Nellie Stone Johnson Community School, and countless neighbors and community members.

Through our programs, we strive to involve youth during every step of the growing process. Project LEAD and Farm Stewards are tasked with evaluating the needs of their neighborhoods and then choosing crops to plant, creating farm plans, and designing programming that will allow for Youth Farmers and All Stars to have as much involvement throughout the growing season as possible.

Once plans for the year are made, Youth Farmers and All Stars are tasked with seeding thousands of plant starts in our St. Paul greenhouse or in their classrooms in Minneapolis. Seeding begins as early as January and plant starts are nurtured throughout the winter. In 2019, youth seeded and distributed over 5,800 plant starts! As the weather gets warmer, plant starts are distributed to garden spaces and are planted by youth during school programming, by Project LEAD after school, and by staff and volunteer work groups.

When school lets out, Youth Farm programming shifts to focus on farm management. During the peak growing months of summer, youth manage garden spaces, ensuring to evaluate which crops are doing well, when they are ready to harvest, and who they should be distributed to. When produce is ready to eat, it is used in three key ways: cooked and preserved during programming, sent home with Youth Farm families, and distributed to neighborhood residents at community events. All of Youth Farm's distribution efforts are informed by youth and also aim to provide fresh, local produce to those with the least access.

Our programs not only aim to teach youth technical growing skills, but also aim to teach them practical life skills through the entire seed to plate process. Through this process, youth not only learn, but employ a variety of skills including project planning, time management, people management, team work, problem solving, critical thinking, and evaluation. Youth Farm participants leave programming knowing that their voices are important and that if they can be leaders in a system as large as the food system, then they can be leaders anywhere.

Growing Community:

As young people advance through Youth Farm's progressive program model they are not only growing food, but also community. At Youth Farm, we believe that the young members of communities have the power to effectively spread knowledge, organize others around a common cause, and create waves of social change. By staying active in urban garden spaces, their schools, and their neighborhoods, youth are generating conversations and interest surrounding food access as well as sharing gardening, cooking, and leadership skills with their peers, families, and neighbors. Annually, Youth Farm's in-school programs, growing season programs, and community events reach over 1,500 youth and 1,100 adults.

As youth work to organize their communities around food, they also work with dozens of partners. To date, Youth Farm has nurtured over 150 community partnerships with organizations and businesses including Saint Paul and Minneapolis Public Schools, the Loppet Foundation, the Minneapolis Community and Technical College, La Puerta Abierta United Methodist Church, Frogtown Farms, Brasa Rotisserie, and many others. By working in partnership, youth learn the real world importance of seeking resources and expertise from outside of their immediate circle. They also broaden their understanding of community and begin to form a growing network of opportunities and interests.

Additionally, Youth Farm's staff and youth partner with over a dozen volunteer work groups each year, ranging in size from 10-40 people. These groups come from a variety of places including local businesses, higher education institutions, and other youth programs. Volunteers assist with a number of tasks including tilling, planting, weeding, harvesting, and mulching. Tending to multiple farm sites throughout the Twin Cities is no small task, so youth engage with volunteers, neighborhood residents, and other urban agriculture organizations to grow thousands of pounds of fresh produce each year. By involving a multitude of community members in the growing process, youth learn to utilize urban gardens as a gathering space in which people not only work together to grow plants, but also work together to foster relationships and create a more connected community.

In addition to volunteer work groups, volunteers are also engaged at our annual fundraising events. These volunteers come in many forms - family, friends, business partners, and even local celebrity chefs. Through connections with numerous local restaurants, we have provided unique dining experiences for Youth Farm supporters at our signature fundraising events: Culinary Pro-Am Day and Taste of the Farm. In 2019, James Beard award-winning chefs, Alex Roberts and Ann Kim, teamed up to create a delicious Mexican-Korean fusion dinner for guests at our 6th annual Taste of the Farm dinner. Partnerships with chefs of such caliber allow us to continue to build community connections surrounding food. In addition, these partnerships allow young people to connect with local professionals, learn about small business, and see entrepreneurs in action.

Through working in partnership, engaging volunteers, and collaborating with local professionals, young people are being equipped with the tools they need to be effective community organizers. We believe that change happens when people are connected, and youth are an important piece of making those connections happen.
