President’s Column

by John Moorman

This is my first column as president of the Virginia Library Association. What I want to accomplish with my presidential columns in the short time that I hold this office is to comment on what is currently facing the association and libraries in general and raise some issues for further discussion and thought.

By the time this column comes out, the Virginia General Assembly will have returned to action in Richmond. This session of the General Assembly will likely be the most difficult since the Depression years of the 1930s. Revenue available to fund state government functions and entities continues to decline, and there are discussions of 15 percent across-the-board cuts to state agencies. As each of us knows, this is on top of the already substantial cuts of recent years.

As all public and school libraries and many academic and special libraries throughout the Commonwealth depend upon state funding to assist them in providing services to their user communities, this economic situation has the potential to cause dire consequences across the board. With a General Assembly unwilling to consider new revenue sources and a governor committed to veto any that might reach his desk, the reality of the situation is that we as a library community need to plan to provide services with fewer resources at our command.

As we do this planning, we need to work within our strategic or long-range plans. What do these plans say about our vision and values? Are our programs and services reflective of these visions and values? As funding for our library is being reduced, are we making service reduction decisions based upon these values and the institutional directions that result from them? If not, we had better begin so doing. In setting priorities for the services that will remain, we must reflect in those priorities the values and directions that we indicate in our planning documents are important to us and our user communities. As institutions, libraries, no matter the type, cannot continue to do all that we have done or might desire to do. This process of priority-setting will be difficult and painful. However, if libraries are to continue to provide effective services to our users, it must be done.

We also need to look at how we might work better across type-of-library lines to more efficiently serve our user communities. Most of us, no matter the type of library we work in, are not isolated from one another. Students enrolled in institutions of higher learning and K-12 schools use the public library on a regular basis for information relating to classroom instruction or for outside information and reading needs. Public library users depend upon academic institutions for access to needed materials not found in their local public libraries. All of us depend upon databases for information provision to our user communities. Let us begin the process of working closer together so that all residents of the Commonwealth of Virginia may continue to receive quality services from the libraries that they use on a daily basis to meet their information and lifestyle needs.

I also cannot emphasize enough the importance of regular personal contact with government officials in this time of economic challenge. These individuals, whether on a local level or as our representatives in the Virginia General Assembly, are continually bombarded by constituents with demands for the limited funding available. Our voice must be heard in the din or we will open our institutions to deeper cuts than might otherwise be the case. Our association’s Legislative Committee has coordinated a library user card campaign to let legislators know of the value of public libraries in their daily lives. If you are in a public library, I trust that your library participated in this campaign. Steps such as this are needed to regularly remind those who control the purse strings that libraries, depending upon their user communities, are either a core part of the educational process, vital for information provision and access in the corporate or special setting, or essential to the continuance of a democratic society where free access to information in its many forms and formats is required for personal development and growth.

As we go about our daily work activities in these troubled times, remember that the Virginia Library Association stands ready to assist you in a variety of ways, including lobbying the General Assembly, providing discounts on services, and information sharing and programming. Your membership and your participation and input in your state association are vital if VLA is to effectively represent your concerns and needs. Keep both coming!

Guidelines for Submissions to Virginia Libraries

1. Virginia Libraries seeks to publish articles and reviews of interest to the library community in Virginia. Articles reporting research, library programs and events, and opinion pieces are all considered for publication. Queries are encouraged. Brief announcements and press releases should be directed to the VLA Newsletter.

2. Please submit manuscripts via email as attachments in Microsoft Word, rich text, or plain text format. Articles should be double-spaced with any bibliographic notes occurring at the end of the article. Please avoid using the automatic note creation function provided by some word processing programs.

3. Articles in Virginia Libraries conform to the latest edition of the Chicago Manual of Style and Webster’s Third New International Dictionary, Unabridged. Accepted articles are subject to editing for style and clarity. Authors will be consulted on points of fact.

4. All articles submitted for consideration are reviewed by the editors and may be refereed by the editorial board. Articles that are not selected for publication will be returned within three months.

5. VLA holds the copyright on all articles published in Virginia Libraries. Contributors of articles receive one copy of the issue in which their work appears.

6. Illustrations are encouraged and should be submitted whenever appropriate to accompany a manuscript. Hard copy illustrations will be returned if requested in advance. Digital images should have a resolution of at least 300 dpi. Authors are responsible for securing legal permission to publish photographs and other illustrations.

7. Each contributor should provide a brief sketch of professional accomplishments of no more than fifty words that includes current title, affiliation, and email address. Unless specified otherwise, this information will be shared with readers of Virginia Libraries. Physical addresses should also be provided for the mailing of contributor’s copies.

8. Articles should generally fall within the range of 750–3,000 words. Please query the editors before submitting any work of greater length.

9. Email manuscripts and queries to Cy Dillon, cdillon@ferrum.edu, and Lyn C. A. Gardner, cgardner@hampton.gov. Please be sure to copy both editors.

10. Virginia Libraries is published quarterly. The deadlines for submission are: November 1 for Number 1, January/February/March; February 1 for Number 2, April/May/June; May 1 for Number 3, July/August/September; and August 1 for Number 4, October/November/December.
