Winter Storm Warning and Extreme Cold this Weekend

Stay Prepared and Safe

Dear Highland Haven Residents,

As the lake breezes turn brisk and we head into the weekend, I wanted to share a timely note on the incoming winter weather. Please stay aware, and if you're able, watch out for neighbors, friends, and family in our wonderful community. Wishing everyone a safe, warm, and cozy few days ahead!

Weather Update: The National Weather Service has issued a Winter Storm Warning for our area (Burnet and Llano counties) from Saturday morning (Jan 24, around 6 AM) through Sunday afternoon (Jan 25, around noon). An Extreme Cold Warning takes effect Saturday evening through Monday morning (Jan 26).

Rain tonight will transition to a wintry mix of freezing rain and sleet Saturday into Sunday, with light to moderate ice accumulations possible (generally 0.1 to 0.25 inches). This raises risks for hazardous roads, bridges, overpasses, and potential power outages from ice on lines or trees. Temperatures drop quickly—highs in the low-to-mid 30s Saturday/Sunday, with overnight lows in the teens or single digits, and wind chills feeling as low as single digits or coming close to zero at times. Impacts could linger into early next week with frigid mornings, and the forecast states we might see significant time above freezing from Saturday afternoon/evening until Tuesday afternoon.

Safety Tips to Help You Prepare:

- Limit travel if possible, especially Saturday through Sunday. If driving, go slow, keep extra distance, and check TxDOT Drive Texas for conditions.
- Protect pipes: Wrap exposed ones, drip faucets, open sink cabinets.
- Bring pets indoors, cover sensitive plants, and provide extra shelter/bedding for outdoor animals.
- Stock flashlights, batteries, blankets, and a charged phone. If using a generator, run it outside only.
- Stay updated via weather.gov or local sources.
