I oppose this project. Compact living space for this amount of area it's not good. It's not good anywhere, there is no where for anyone to have an activity outside of their house or whatever you call these buildings condominium townhomes. If anyone's going to have a party or get together they can only have like one person over it looks like parking situation is too small. Traffic will be another issue the driveway will turn into a U-turn escape route. I really don't understand why the need is to cram as many people into a small amount of space as possible. If one of them does catch on fire then they're all kind of catching on fire. It would be such more of an attractive style if there was four maybe five or six units total with space around them to have some personal space. There are numerous other reasons I disapprove cutting down the old growth trees . All I see is more people paying for water and utilities more people more money for the city, , attractive I don't think so. There are a whole bunch of other reasons that they should not be crammed together.
