Hi! I'm Kami,
a Shiba Inu!

1. Use the Markup tool to highlight the meaning of "Shiba" and "Inu".

Excerpt from the National Shiba Club of America about the origin of the Shiba Inu:

A small, sturdy, double-coated, prick-eared dog with a fox-like expression; the Shiba Inu originated in Japan, quite possibly as early as 1500 BC.

The first Shiba was officially recognized by the Japanese Preservation Society (NIPPO) in 1932. In 1936, the Shiba was designated a 'precious natural treasure' in its country of origin.

The name Shiba Inu was first used to identify the breed in the 1920's. "Inu" means dog, but the translation of "Shiba" varies.

Shiba can mean the color of or an actual brushwood plant indigenous to the Shiba's habitat; more often Shiba means small.

Thus Shiba Inu is translated as "brushwood dog" or "small dog".

It is the smallest of a family of breeds known as the "Japanese Native Breeds". The others are the Akita (largest) and the Kishu, Hokkai, Shikoku and Kai (medium). Shibas appeared in the United States after the end of World War II.

Excerpt from the National Shiba Club of America about the physical characteristics of the Shiba Inu:

The Shiba is a very proportionate dog with a height to length ratio of 10 to 11. Males run from 14.5 to 16.5 inches tall with females ranging an inch shorter.

It is a medium boned, moderately compact and well muscled dog with a spitz-like appearance. Weight varies according to height up to about 25 pounds.

Because of its hunting heritage, it should be quick, agile, and able to turn quickly. It has a dense double coat similar to that of a husky. The breed standard has the following colors: Red, Red Sesame (sable), and Black and Tan. White and cream shadings are present on the legs, belly, chest, and part of the face and tail.
