Dear Norm:

I had hoped to see you at the meetings of the Conference on Jewish Philosophy but was disappointed. Unfortunately, I left in such a hurry that I had no chance even to call you.

I am writing to ask a question, if not to make a complaint. I finally have seen a copy of a Treasury of Tradition. I had assumed that the contributors would receive at least the courtesy of a copy of a volume. I have never received such a copy. I was also interested to see ^{that} though an article of mine is printed, my name is not listed among the contributors. I don't normally react to such matters, but I did think it ought to be called to your attention.

My best to you and your family.

Cordially yours,

Marvin

P.S. It's not a major issue, but it doesn't point to a kind of situation which in the case of one of your rabbinic colleagues of the like to make a complaint type would cause a hard explosion.
