Dear Rabbi Lamm:

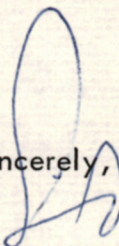

Your week-end at Brandeis is still making waves. One of the positive results is the formation of a small group who will try to find whether they really want to learn from text, rather than to indulge in the usual "adult education" subjects about Judaism.

These are people who are old-timers at Brandeis who heard many lectures. Until now, they have not felt the urge to really sit and learn. I have arranged with Rabbi Simcha Wasserman to learn with us at the first session. I hope it works, but if his method proves to be too rough (I have no reason to believe that it is), we will try something simpler.

You referred to Rabbi Elchonon Wasserman's "Epoch of the Messiah" and the fact that you did not have a copy. I am enclosing the latest edition in English, as well as the rare Jewish original. This is small return for the great pleasure you gave Allie and me.

Work hard.

Sincerely,

SIDNEY EISENSHTAT
