An Aristocratic Upbringing

In April 1848, Ravi Varma Koil Thampuran was born into an aristocratic family in Kilimanoor Palace in rural Kilimanoor, a village in the state formerly known as Travancore, in South India. His elders called him Ravi Varma.

Varma grew up in the world of the palace arts—the royal family served as patrons for many artists. Varma’s uncle, Bharani Nal Raja Raja Varma (1812–1883), was a talented royal artist. He saw that his nephew was good at drawing and added art to Varma’s formal palace education.

India has a long artistic tradition. Historically, Indian painting to this point had been primarily the stylized form common to the highly complex Indian miniatures, which date at least as far back as the 800s CE.

Raja Ravi Varma painted this portrait of his uncle, his first artistic mentor and tutor.
Early Years

Raja Raja Varma only painted as a hobby. But he trained his nephew to become a master draftsman, teaching him everything he knew. At 13, Ravi Varma was invited to live in the court palace and study the artists at work there.

Varma often wandered the palace, closely studying the art. He especially admired the European realist style of painting. He wanted to experiment with realism and to use oil paint as a medium. The European technique of perspective intrigued Varma, and he wanted to master it.

Varma approached court artist Ramaswamy Naidoo, asking if he’d provide instruction. Naidoo refused, viewing Varma as a potential rival. In secret, one of Naidoo’s apprentices taught Varma how to paint in the European realist style, using oils. Varma practiced for nine years, eventually mastering European techniques.
No one of aristocratic birth painted as a profession—it was simply a pastime. With the court’s backing, however, Varma became a professional artist.

Varma’s early work consisted primarily of commissioned portraits of royal family members and government leaders.

Later Career

As Varma grew as an artist, he often painted scenes from ancient Indian mythology, Hindu religious texts, and epics. His faith and tradition were very important to him. Varma also painted everyday subjects, such as landscapes, animals, and the people of India at work and leisure.

Varma was chosen to send paintings to the 1893 World’s Fair in Chicago, to represent India as part of the ‘Parliament of Religions’ exhibit. Varma sent 10 paintings. A detail from one of those paintings, ‘Expectation,’ is shown here.

As Varma became more famous, his work was increasingly in demand across India. He was encouraged by a mentor to reproduce it in an affordable way so that the average citizen could afford it. He opened the Ravi Varma Fine Art Lithographic Press to create lithographs—print copies of his paintings. Varma also encouraged the establishment of the first Indian art museums.

For his work, Varma received the Kaiser-i-Hind Medal in 1904, the highest medal of honor given by the government run by the British Empire in India. He was the first artist to receive this recognition. At his death in 1906, Varma had become India’s greatest painter. He is still revered for his artwork and has inspired countless artists for more than 100 years.

Chapter 2: Warming Up

Before you explore, answer the questions in your notebook.

Consider

1. Mythology is the story of the heroes, gods, and goddesses of a particular people. Why do you think painters like Varma would feature mythological stories in their work?

Discover

2. Varma sent 10 paintings to the Chicago World’s Fair in 1893. Why do you think he chose to portray different types of Indian women?
Color and Detail

Varma was well known for his ability to capture mood, emotion, and the action of a story in his paintings. He was also famous for his use of bright colors and exquisite detail. In this painting, Varma shows a character from Hindu mythology, Shakuntala, pretending to remove a thorn from her foot so that she can gaze back at her lover, Dushyanta.

Many of Varma’s paintings feature the popular musical instruments of India. Stringed instruments called the veena and the sitar are common, but the flute and percussion instruments can also be found.

‘Bombay Singer (Bombay Songstress)’ was one of the 10 paintings sent to Chicago for the 1893 World’s Fair. Varma’s intention was to show different social classes of women in India. He wanted to convey the great cultural variety of the Indian population. In addition to this painting of a singer and her instrument, he included a depiction of a Muslim woman visiting a bath and a poor Gypsy on a street with her children.

This is a detail from a print of the painting ‘Shanmukha Subramanyaswami,’ which features the Hindu god Subramanya, shown here riding his peacock. The god is referred to here as Shanmuka, which means “six faces.”
Chapter 2: Wrapping Up

Now that you’ve read the chapter, reflect on what you’ve learned by answering the question below.

Many of the paintings you’ve seen in this lesson have been of women. Varma was well known for his portrayal of beautiful women. One interesting fact is that, unless the painting was a portrait, the women of his paintings are mostly identical, with different surroundings and wardrobes. Why might Varma have painted the same face on his female subjects?
Chapter 3:
Varma’s Impact on India

What is this chapter about?
Varma’s artistic legacy

Chapter 3: Warming Up

Before you explore, answer the questions in your notebook.

Consider

1. Varma is famous for the expressive way in which he painted the eyes of his subjects. Why do you think the eyes became some of the most important features in his portraits and other paintings of people?

Discover

2. How does a lithograph differ from an actual painting? Why would a lithograph be more affordable?
Bringing Emotion to Art

As you have read, one of Varma’s primary influences on the Indian art world was bringing emotional expression into painting. Traditional Indian painting styles, while intricate, were flat and expressionless. The subjects were treated more as sacred icons than as humans with emotions and depth.

Take a look at the painting shown here, ‘Tara Bai – Tanjore style painting.’ It was done by Varma before he began painting in a realist style and using dramatic perspective, light, and color to create depth. On the next page, you will see a similar subject, painted after Varma transitioned to new techniques. What details do you notice about the painting shown here?

See a print of a Tanjore-style painting by another artist here. The print was made by the Ravi Varma Press.
This painting, ‘Maharani Chimnabai II,’ was painted by Varma 29 years after the painting on the previous page. The rich colors, shading, and use of light and dark to create depth show how much Varma’s work changed during that time. How is this painting different from that on the previous page?
Telling Traditional Stories in New Ways

Varma’s paintings also leave another important legacy. They tell the stories of the Puranas and classic texts using more dramatic scenes. Contrasted with earlier paintings of the same subject matter, Varma’s paintings bring new dimension to the stories. Take, for example, the painting shown here, ‘Chanda in Her Palace from a Laur-Chanda Manuscript.’ It shows the flat, two-dimensional style characteristic of earlier artistic traditions. This particular painting is from northern India and dates to around 1540.

See more on how Varma brought new life to old stories here.
Art for Everyone

Finally, the Raja Ravi Varma Press brought Varma’s work to everyone, in many different formats. His paintings were reproduced as affordable prints. His images could be found on textiles, matchbox covers, labels, calendars, and more. This “democratization” of the art world cemented Varma’s place in Indian popular culture forever.

Chapter 3: Wrapping Up

Now that you’ve read the chapter, reflect on what you’ve learned by answering the question below.

You learned that the press Varma founded allowed art to be reproduced in many different ways. Reflect back on the types of products on which Varma’s images have been used. How do these objects show that Varma had become part of Indian popular culture?
Digital Learning in Action

So, what did you learn? Read the questions and complete the learning activities below to extend your learning based on what you just experienced.
