(GB-Lbl Sloane 1021, f. 41r)

You call me the lute, I am well known to students
This is my name indeed, God is well pleased with me
For him I sing and play with sweet tone, which earns me praise and honor
My lovely and fine singing moves the heart and emotions, banishes sorrow and sadness and moves the mind to happiness.
Whoever holds my art in honor pleases God and man
It is pleasing to everyone when it is presented at the right time.

EDITORIAL METHOD

The tablature in this edition is for solo lute in renaissance (viel ton) tuning: 6 courses tuned G c f a d' g', assuming a lute in G. The original sources are notated in German tablature and transcribed here into French tablature with gridiron rhythm notation typeset using Wayne Cripps TAB programme version 4.3.70 on an Apple iMac operating on system MacOS Mojave 10.14.2. Playing instruction are reproduced when present in original sources, in the form of tenuto signs for held notes (+ in Judenkünig 1523, Gerle 1532, and Newsidler 1536a, 1547 and 1549 and * in Gerle 1552) and dots under ciphers for off beats fingered with right hand index finger for right handed lutenists (in Judenkünig 1523, Newsidler 1536a and Heckel 1556/1562).

INTRODUCTION

The German words preambel and priamel (Latin: praeambulum, praeludium, preambulum, preludium) are synonymous with prelude which in musical terminology refers to piece of music that preceeds one or more others. It is generally used for an improvisational free form piece for an instrumentalist to warm up and check the tuning of the instrument. Similar pieces called regel or fundament were used to demonstrate rules or aspects of technique to accompany practical instructions to learn to play a particular instrument, especially keyboard instruments, but also the lute.

Thirty of the one-hundred and fifty or so books of lute music published in the sixteenth century were notated in German lute tablature. Of these, eighteen prints and reprints include examples titled priamel, priambel, preambulum or praeambulum as well as a fundament or regel and all seventy-one of these are transcribed into French tablature in this edition.¹ The examples titled fantasia or recercar in German tablature prints and manuscripts were published in three previous volumes, which also included a detailed description of the German tablature notation and its variants used by music publishers in Germany.² The German tablature prints represented here were from the presses of a variety of printers in one of four cities, Judenkünig in Vienna (printed by Singriener), Hans Gerle and Hans Newsidler in Nürnberg (printed by Formschneider, Guldenmundt, Günther, Gutknecht, Laub and Petreio), Wolff Heckel in Strasbourg (printed by Müller and Wyss) and Matthaeus Weissel in Frankfurt (printed by Eichorn), and were published between 1523 and 1591, a period of about seventy years.

Pierre Phalèse published a series anthologies of lute music in Leuven beginning in the mid-1540s that included transcriptions into French tablature of preludes, fantasias and dances from Italian printed lute books.³ Phalèse's books also have some overlap with the German lute prints published prior to his own prints: Phalèse Des Chansons Reduictz en Tablature de Lute ... Livre Premier 1545 includes a Praeludium that shares a passage with a preamel in Judenkünig Ain schone kunstliche (no. 6 here) and includes a Primum Fundamentum copied from Newsidler Ein Newgeordent Künstliche Lautenbuch 1536 (no. 18). Phalèse also plundered the same Italian prints as Gerle, transcribing eleven of the same fantasias as Gerle Eyn Neues sehr Künstlichs Lautenbuch of 1552. And a later Præambulum in Weissel Tablatura of 1573 (no. 72 here) and found in two later manuscripts, was included in Phalèse Theatrum Musicum Longe of 1571 predating publication by Weissel.

HANS JUDENKÜNIG

The introduction to the two books of lute instructions published by Hans Judenkünig in 1523 tells us that he was born in Schwäbischen-Gmünd (Schwäbisch-Gmünd near Stuttgart in Germany) and was a lutenist in Vienna in Austria. He lived in the old quarter of Vienna in a house called the Gundlachhaus, and is recorded in 1518 as a lutenist in the Corpus Christi confraternity of St. Stephens Cathedral. He was the author of the first known instruction books for the lute, Utilis & compendiarie introductio and Ain schone kunstliche underweisung, probably published together in 1523 by Hans Singriener in Vienna.⁴ It is likely that he is represented in the woodcut of a lutenist in both the prints (see illustration above and note the position of the left hand thumb, the right hand playing over the rose and the crude representation of only 5 single strings).⁵ He was probably born c.1445-50 and died in Vienna in March 1526.

¹ The titles preambel, priambel, praeludium, preludium, prelude, fantasia, fuga and recercar were often used interchangeably in different prints and manuscript sources. In particular, Hans Gerle's Eyn Neues sehr Künstlichs Lautenbuch of 1552, included thirty-one fantasias and recercars transcribed into German tablature from Italian prints and titled them all 'Priambel'. Preambulum and praecambel from manuscripts in German tablature will be the subject of a future companion volume.

² All the pieces titled recercar fantasia and fuga in German tablature can be found in Robinson-I, Robinson-II and Robinson-III (see bibliography). For a modern edition of preludes and recercars of Italian origin see 158 Early Cinquecento Preludes and Recercars for Renaissance Lute (Albury, Lute Society Music Editions 2018).

³ The first and second books of Pierre Phalèse's five-volume series Des Chansons, are his only prints to include preludes.

The earliest known priam[b]el for lute are the five presumably composed by Judenkünig himself as exercises for his Ain Schone kunstliche of 1523. The instructions are divided into sections dealing with progressively more difficult left hand positions each of the sections beginning with a pream[b]el as an exercise in use of the hand position described. The first (no. 3 here) and second (no. 6) preamel are exercises for the left hand in first position with fingering up to the fifth fret. The third (no. 2), fourth (no. 4) and fifth (no. 7) pream[b]el explore barré positions on the third, fourth and fifth frets, respectively. Judenkünig's Ain Schone kunstliche also includes a three part preamel titled Ain Trium (no. 5) in the section in using hand position with barré on the fourth fret. Right hand fingering is indicated in all five preamel using hooks on the rhythm signs (amended to single dots under tablature letters here) to indicate off-beats or notes plucked with the right hand index finger, and + are used as tenuto signs to show held notes, in the first two pream[b]el only.

HANS GERLE

On the title page of his Tablatur auff die Laudten Hans Gerle described himself as lutenist, lute maker and citizen of Nürnberg. He was probably born around 1500 and his death was recorded in 1570. In the preface to both his Musica Teusch and Tablatur auff die Laudten he acknowledges the influence of his predecessor and probably his teacher in Nürnberg, the lutenist Adolff Plindthamer (Blindhamer).⁶ However, he does not mention his contemporary in Nürnberg, Hans Newsidler. The lutemaker Conrad Gerle recorded in Nürnberg from 1516 until his death in 1521 may have been his father. Hans was the eldest child and acted as guardian of three brothers and sisters after their mother died.⁷ The portrait left is from an engraving dated 1532 now in the Bibliothèque nationale de France.⁸ He published three tablature books all printed by Jeronimum Formschneider in Nürnberg. The first Musica Teusch published in 1532 is an instruction manual for solo lute as well as for a consort of viols (geigen),⁹ and was reprinted in 1537 and revised with the title Musica und Tablatur in 1546. The second book Tablatur auff die Laudten was published in 1533 and is an instruction manual for solo lute only, and the third Eyn Neues sehr Künstlichs Lautenbuch was published in 1552 and is an anthology of Italian lute music transcribed into German tablature without any instructions.

His books include forty preamel, the two in 1532 (no. 9 & 10) parodies of two from Judenkünig's books (no. 3 & 6). Six preamel are in Tablatur auff die Laudten of 1533 (no. 7 & 10-14), one (no. 13) a cognate for a fantasia by Francesco da Milano (Ness 5). Gerle's setting is the earliest known of this Francesco fantasia. Another Preambel in the Gerle 1533 print (no. 14) extends to 244 bars and shares material with a similarly long preamel (197 bars) from the second part of Hans Newsidler's later lute book from 1536 (no. 30), so that Newsidler was presumably parodying Gerle, or both were drawing on previous priambels, possibly for keyboard as the title Ein seer guter Organistischer Preambel of one other here (no. 23) suggests. In 1546, after more than ten years, Gerle published a revised and expanded edition of his first book not including the two priamel from 1532, but but adding a preamel that is another Francesco fantasia (no. 16, Ness 3). Then six years later in 1552 Gerle published his last known lute book that included thirty-one items titled preamel that are slightly embellished fantasias transcribed from six lute books printed in Italy (five in Venezia and one in Roma): eleven are from Castelfranchi Intabolatura de Lento de diversi autori 1536 (no. 60-70), three (no. 44, 45 & 51) lauttenschleher' became a citizen of Nürnberg and given a civic salary for teaching the lute there in 1514. See Martin Kirnbauer 'Blindhamer's lute tablature (A-Wn Mus. Hs. 41950, c.1525)' in: Frühe Lautentabulturen im Facsimile (Winterthur, Amadeus 2003) pp. 242-253.

HANS NEWSIDLER

Hans Newsidler was born c.1508-9 in Pressburg, Hungary (now Bratislava, Slovakia) possibly in the district called Newsidl. He moved to Nürnberg in 1530 probably to escape the Turkish army advancing through Hungary, where he married in 1530, became a citizen in 1531 and died in 1563. He had at least eighteen children by two wives, the first wife dying in 1556.¹⁰ His sons Melchior (1531-1590) and Conrad (1541-1604) were also lutenists, the former the most famous in Germany in the second half of the sixteenth century.

Hans Newsidler published six lute books with some overlap of contents, two of them also published again as later revised editions. He describes himself on the title page of each as 'Lutinisten und Burger zu Nurnberg', that is lutenist and citizen and all the books were published in Nürnberg between 1536 and 1549, using five different printers. His first lute books were published as a pair in 1536, Ein Nengeordent Künstliche Lautenbuch and Der Ander Theil des Lautenbuchs, the first with detailed playing instructions and beginning with music of a didactic character and the second with more difficult music comprising highly embellished vocal intabulations. He then published a single volume Ein neues Lauten-büchlein in 1540 without instructions and three years later in 1544 a set of three more lute books, Das Erst - Ander - Dritt - Buch Ein Neues Lautenbüchlein, with brief instructions in the first, and a copy of the more comprehensive instructions from the first book of 1536 in the second, with intabulations of psalms and motets for more advanced players without any instructions in the third.

The books between them include eleven preambel, as well as four didactic items a fundament, two regel and a trium, also included in this edition. Ein Nengeordent Künstliche Lautenbuch of 1536 includes five relatively simple preambel (no. 21a, 24, 26b, 29 & 31). The companion volume Der Ander Theil des Lautenbuchs includes another two that are more complex and extended in length, one titled organistischer preambel (no. 23), in the style of a keyboard preambel, and the other titled preambel oder fantasey (no. 30) that is a 'preambel or fantasia', running to 197 bars and sharing passages with a long preambel published by Gerle (no. 14). The companion 1536 volume also includes a three-part preambel-like item called trium mit schönen fugen (no. 28). No preambel are in Newsidler's print of 1540, and the series of three from 1544 only include a copy of one from the first edition of 1536 in Das Ander Buch (see no. 29), and the revised edition of Ein Nengeordent Künstliche Lautenbuch published as Das Erste Buch Ein Neues Lautenbüchlein in 1547 includes reworkings of two preambel from the first edition calling them Preambulum (no. 21b & 26a). However, the revised and expanded edition of Das Ander Buch from 1544 published as Das Ander Buch Ein New künstliche Lauten Buch in 1549, Newsidler's last publication, added four new preambel (no. 20, 22, 25 & 27), three quite simple and the fourth more complex and titled preambel mit fugen (no. 20). No concordances for the preambel in Newsidler's prints are known, except that no. 24 was copied into the now fragmentary manuscript lute book of Daniel Lindenman (see inventory below).

Although Hans Newsidler's first lute book was a tutorial, he did not annotate the preambel with playing instructions, although he did add them to four preambel in the revised editions published in 1547 (no. 21b & 26a) and 1549 (no. 20 & 22). These four preambel include the + sign to the left of ciphers on lower courses of the lute (repositioned to the right here) to indicate holding the adjacent note, and dots above ciphers to indicate off beats or notes plucked with the right hand index finger. However, all his lute books except the books of more advanced music Der Ander Theil des Lautenbuchs of 1536 and Das Dritt Buch of 1544 include didactic exercises annotated with playing instructions. One is titled fundament and two more regel, and all three are reproduced exactly the same in each of the prints. The fundament (no. 17) includes both + for held notes and one to four dots above ciphers (changed to numbers 1 to 4 here) to indicate fingering with left hand index, middle, ring and little finger, respectively. Of the two regel, the tablature for the first (no. 18) is printed twice, once with annotations for left hand fingering as above and is then printed again but with right hand fingering: both left and right hand fingering are combined in one version here. The second regel is printed in two variant forms, one in triple time (no. 19a)¹¹ and the other in duple time (no. 19b) and the two variant forms are first printed with left hand fingering as above and + signs for held notes and then printed again with right hand

WOLFF HECKEL

On the title pages and prefatory text of his two lute duet part books Discant and Tenor Lautten Buch published in Strasbourg Wolff Heckel describes himself as 'von Munchen / Burger zü Straßburg'. He was born in Munich probably c.1515, and became a citizen of Strasbourg by 1556 when the first edition was printed there by Urban Wyss.¹² It is not recorded where or when Heckel died, but he was presumably still alive in 1562 when the second edition of his books were printed by Christian Müller in Strasbourg. Heckel's books include forty lute duets and eighty lute solos, forty in each book. The discant part book also includes four pages of instructions explaining how to read the tablature.

Despite Boetticher and Radke describing Heckel as 'lutenist and composer', there is nothing recorded to confirm that he was a professional lutenist and teacher, nor that he composed any of the music in his duet books. He may only have made the solo and duet intabulations and dance arrangements.¹³ It seems more likely that he was a collector, as twenty of the duets in his prints are concordant with Hans Jacob Wecker's Tenor Lautenbuch published in 1552, four years before his own first edition. Also, some of the solos are quite similar to music from the lute books of Hans Neusidler published in Nürnberg in the previous two decades. Thus, it is also doubtful that Heckel composed the single preambulum in his tenor part book (no. 38) which he may have collected from elsewhere, although it is not known from any other source.

MATTHAEUS WAISSEL

On the title pages of his lute books, Matthaeus Waissel is described as from 'Bartensteinensem, Borussum', which was Bartenstein in East Prussia and now Bartoszyce in Poland. He was born c.1535-40, and may have been the 'Matthaeus Waiszel Borussus' who matriculated at the University of Frankfurt an der Oder in 1553. In 1561 he is also recorded as matriculating from the University of Königsberg (now Kaliningrad), where he studied theology.¹⁴ In 1573 he was appointed Rektor of the school at Schippenbeil (now Sępólno in Poland) and in 1574 he was employed as a parish priest at Langheim, near Rastenburg (now Ketrzyn). His patron in the parish was High Steward Wilhelm von Wetzhausen, who died in 1585 and was succeeded by his son Hans. However, Hans then began proceedings leading to Waissel's dismissal in 1587. In 1591 and 1592 he was in Frankfurt an der Oder supervising the printing of his lute books, after which he settled in Königsberg where he died in 1602 aged about 60. His son Matthaeus was also a lutenist.

He published four anthologies of lute music, three containing lute solos: Tabulatura in 1573, another Tabulatura in 1591, reprinted in 1592, and a second anthology titled Lautenbuch including instructions for playing the lute also in 1592.¹⁵ The fourth book was again called Tabulatura but this was a slim volume of eight paired dances for two lutes. All his books were printed by Johann or Andreas Eichorn in Frankfurt an der Oder. Waissel also authored two non-musical works, Summa doctrinae sacrae, a biblical history in verse, and Chronica alter preussischer ... Historien, a collection of ancient local stories, published in Königsberg, in 1596 and 1599, respectively. In the preface to his Tabulatura of 1573 he claims he was taught by lutenists in Italy and Germany, but he is nowhere recorded as being a professional lutenist. Also in the preface to Tabulatura 1573 he acknowledges collecting music from other sources, and his prints are dominated by Italian and German dances which he may have arranged for lute himself as well as intabulating the vocal models. Thus, although concordant versions of music from his prints are found in manuscript sources, where they bear his name, it seems unlikely that he was a composer. The inclusion of detailed instructions in one of the books might however suggest that he taught lute at the school he worked at or elsewhere.

Two preambulum (no. 1 & 72 here) together with two phantasias are found in the Tabulatura of 1573, otherwise the music is equally divided between vocal intabulations and dances. The Tabulatura of 1591 (reprinted in 1592) includes eight preambulum (no. 32, 40, 43, 47, 49, 55, 59 & 71), the remainder of the contents all being dances. Four fantasias¹⁶ but no preambel or preambulum are found in Waissel's Lautenbuch of 1592. The preambel in his prints are not found in any other sources, except for one (no. 72 here) is in Phalèse & Bellère Theatrum Musicum Longe of 1571 as well as two manuscript sources of Swiss and Danish provenance.
